SUBJECT:

Proclamation of Consular Convention with the German Democratic Republic

The State Department has forwarded the Proclamation of the Consular Convention between the United States and the German Democratic Republic. In accordance with the terms of the Convention, it enters into force on February 19, 1981.

The long and arduous negotiations culminated in the GDR acceptance of our position on the crucial nationality, issue, i.e., our traditional view that there is one German nation which is currently divided into two German states, the Federal Republic of German and the German Democratic Republic -inter alia that we not recognize the German Democratic contention that there is a "German Democratic Republic nationality." This Convention establishes a basis for our Embassy to the GDR to protect United States citizens travelling in the German Democratic Republic while maintaining our basic position on the sensitive German nationality issue.

MEMORANDUM FOR MR. RICHARD ALLEN
THE WHITE HOUSE

Subject: Proclamation of Consular Convention with the German Democratic Republic

Attached for signature by the President is the proclamation of the Consular Convention between the United States of America and the German Democratic Republic signed at Berlin on September 4, 1979.

The Senate gave its advice and consent to ratification on July 2, 1980; the President signed the instrument of ratification on August 7, 1980, and instruments of ratification were exchanged at Washington on January 19, 1981. In accordance with the terms of the Convention, it enters into force on February 19, 1981.

At the time United States-German Democratic Republic diplomatic relations were established in 1974, we set as our first objective the negotiation of a consular convention. We believed that such a convention was necessary to establish a basis for greater contacts between the United States and the German Democratic Republic. As a subsidiary, but key objective, we determined that nothing in a United States-German Democratic Republic consular convention could conflict with our traditional view that there is one German nation which is currently divided into two German states, the Federal Republic of Germany and the German Democratic Republic. This required, inter alia, that we not recognize the German Democratic contention that there is a "German Democratic Republic nationality" distinct from that of the Federal Republic of Germany. The negotiations were long and arduous, but in the end the German Democratic Republic accepted our position on the crucial nationality issue, opening the way to the signing of the Convention. This Convention establishes a basis for our Embassy to the German Democratic Republic to protect United States citizens travelling in the German Democratic Republic while maintaining our basic position on the sensitive German nationality issue. As such, its entry into force is very much in the United States national interest.

Dear General Knight:

Thank you for your letter of June 25, 1983, to President Assgan concerning the general court-martial of Private E-1 Austin 5. Stockmen.

As such as he would like to, the President cannot reply personally to every communication he requires. Therefore, he has asked the departments and agencies of the Federal Government to reply on his behalf in table instances where they have special knowledge or special authority under the law. For this reason, your communication was forwarded to officials of the Department of Defense.

information received by this office discloses that Private Stockson's uses is currently unwryping appellate review before the U.S. Army Court of Military Maview. The court meand argument in Private Stockson's case on June 17, 1983. The decision is presently pending.

I have considered a copy of your letter to Private Stockman's appointed military defense counsel, Captain Peter R. Huntsann, for appropriate consideration, as he is in the last position to decide what issues to raise during the appeal. A say issue of Captain Huntswen's case, Vigorously argued Defore the court, was the alleged inappropriate severity of the montehore.

As Private Stockman's case is unlergoing appellate review, it would be inappropriate for me to comment on the findings and sentence, or on the metits or factual circumstances that actually exist in his case. These are metters which will be subject to consideration during the course of appellate review. Mowever, you may be certain that all aspects of his case will be given full and careful consideration at each level of review and that his legal rights will be carefully protected.

Thank you for your interest on behalf of Private Stockman,

Sincerely,

Bethesda, Md 20817 25 June 1983 President Ronald Reagan The White House Washington, D.C. 20500 Dear Mr. President: Enclosed is a copy of a letter I have just sent the Secretary of the Army regarding the serious punishment given to Austin S. Stockman who tried to help an East German family escape to freedom. I am ashamed of the Army and of the United States Government for this act of gross injustice. It is a sign that we really do not understand the seriousness of the threat to losing our freedom. It is also a sign of the density of our bureauracy in failing to take advantage of an act of brayery from Americans who do understand the value of freedom. As I told Secretary Marsh, Mr. Stockman should have been rewarded instead of punished. Instead, the United States Government has ruined a man's life when his major mistake was getting caught. The Army's act of injustice goes 180 degrees counter to what principle would have dictated be done. Sincerely, Brigadier General, U.S. krmy (Ret)

7005 Radnor Rd. Bethesda, Md 20817 25 June 1983

The Honorable John O. Marsh Jr. Secretary of the Army Washington, D.C. 20301

Dear Secretary Marsh:

The attached article about the court martialing of Austin S. Stockman for trying to help an East German family escape to freedom is very disturbing to me both as an American citizen and as a retired Army general officer.

We sometimes forget the serious nature of the struggle to the death (our death) that Soviet-led communism is imposing on the West. We sometimes take for granted the value of the freedoms that we have. We are in danger of losing those freedoms if we do not act with courage. Unless there is additional information not covered in the article, Mr. Stockman showed the kind of courage that deserves praise from the United States Government rather than the severe punishment of six months at hard labor, loss of pay and a bad conduct discharge. The action of the Army shows a shocking lack of understanding of the psychological meaning of the act of Mr. Stockman. He was willing to stick his neck out and act for the cause of freedom. His real problem was that he was caught. Was Mr. Stockman punished because he caused an embarrassment to the Army? Rather than being a cause of embarrassment, the event could have been used positively in a public relations sense showing that people living under communism still cherish freedom. In my view the Army and the United States Government utterly failed in handling the Stockman situation.

Instead of being punished, Mr. Stockman should have been re-assigned, promoted and given the Soldiers Medal. I am ashamed of and disgusted with the leadership of my service.

Sincerely,

Albion W. Knight Jr.

Dear Mr. Robinson:

Responsible Defense Department and U.S. Army officials and I have reviewed your letter of September 28, concerning LIFE magazine's interest in publishing a picture story on the U.S. Military Liaison Mission at Potsdam, Germany.

As you know, the U.S. mission in Potsdam is the liaison for the Commander-in-Chief, U.S. Army, Europe, to the Commander-in-Chief, Soviet Group of Forces in Germany. As a relic of the postwar occupation of Germany by the World War II allies, the liaison missions have no direct relationship with German authorities in either the Federal Republic or the German Democratic Republic. The U.S. mission is not a "bellwether of Soviet-American relations, instantly detecting any change in diplomatic climate." On the contrary, one of its principal features is that it is relatively insulated from such fluctuations. Our personnel in Potsdam deal only with Soviet forces in East Germany and have no contact with GDR military or civilian officials. As you mentioned, the assignment provides valuable experience and further training for Russian language and area specialists in the U.S. armed forces.

Since the personnel and work of the U.S. military liaison mission are well known to Soviet military authorities, there is, as you note, nothing secret about them. We believe, however, that to remain effective, the mission should maintain its low profile. Publicizing the mission in a national magazine could prompt the Soviets to place restrictions on the group's normal operations. For these reasons, I'm unable to help you. Please accept my sincere regrets.

Dear Mr. Robinson:

I have reviewed with responsible Defense Department and U.S. Army officials your letter of September 28, concerning LIFE magazine's interest in publishing a picture story on the U.S. Military Liaison Mission at Potsdam, Germany.

As you know, the U.S. mission in Potsdam is the liaison for the Commander-in-Chief, U.S. Army, Europe, to the Commander-in-Chief, Soviet Group of Forces in Germany. As a relic of the postwar occupation of Germany and shared responsibilities among the World War II allies, the liaison missions have no direct relationship with German authorities in either the Federal Republic or the German Democratic Republic. The U.S. mission is not a "bellwether of Soviet-American relations, instantly detecting any change in diplomatic climate." On the contrary, one of its principal features is that it is relatively insulated from such fluctuations. Our personnel in Potsdam deal only with Soviet forces in East Germany and have no contact with GDR military or civilian officials. As you mentioned, the assignment provides valuable experience and further training for Russian language and area specialists in the U.S. armed forces.

Since the personnel and work of the U.S. military liaison mission are well known to Soviet military authorities, there is—as you note—nothing secret about them. However, we believe that the continued effectiveness of the mission depends to a considerable extent upon sustaining the low profile it has normally maintained. Publicizing the mission in a national magazine could prompt the Soviets to place restrictions on the group's normal operations. For these reasons, I regret I cannot support your request for assistance to do a photo story on the U.S. liaison mission.

Dear Mr. Deaver:

Jet NSC us for grace us nesponse

For the past several weeks LIFE has sought to obtain permission from the Army and the Department of Defense to undertake a picture story on the Military Liaison Mission in Potsdam. Unfortunately, the various public relations officers with whom we have discussed the story have been unable to process our request either because of jurisdictional problems or because higher ranking officers have shied away from press attention to this crucial military installation. Moreover, a number of Public Affairs Officers have suggested to us that permission for this project can only come from the White House.

We feel that the Military Liaison Mission is a significant story that will assume even greater importance in the coming months, and we are hoping that you will lend your support to a LIFE essay on this unusual military outpost.

The mission was established in 1947 by agreement between Generals Hubner and Melinin as a liaison between the occupation armies in Germany. It has been, and continues to be one of the U.S.'s main links not only with the Red Army but with the German Democratic Republic, as well. Throughout the turbulent history of the area the mission has played a key role in maintaining peaceful relations between the powers. It was crucial in preventing hostilities during the Berlin Wall crisis, for instance, and has been a bellwether of Soviet-American relations, instantly detecting any change in the diplomatic climate. The mission has been credited with maintaining the relative harmony that has existed along the German border where two opposing armies have stood counterpoised without a serious shooting incident for over three decades.

The mission is hardly secret; both the British and the Soviets operate similar installations. The existence and function of these missions are provided for by agreement among the powers. For military officers the U.S. mission is an important posting for career advancement; but, more significantly, it has received publicity in the past when relations between the U.S. and the Soviets have become strained.
