Dear Mr. Deaver,

I returned from Rome last night and I am in a better position at this time to answer the questions that you asked me when we met at the Embassy of Italy on the occasion of the presentation of official awards to the Italian-American doctors.

The short report that you will find enclosed focuses on the electoral choices in Italy and their possible impact. I do hope that you will find it useful to understand the underlying factors in the June elections. If there is any need for clarification, do not hesitate to call me.

With my warmest regards.

The political elections in Italy present us at the most with three scenarios, all of them impinging on the Socialist vote that is determinant to the formation of the new government. The first scenario is the most likely. It calls for a Socialist vote slightly higher than in the past elections but not high enough to give the Socialist Party (PSI) the power of dictating political terms to the Christian Democrats (DC). According to this scenario, the DC would hold its position comfortably or possibly strengthen it by one point. The smaller center parties would do reasonably well (the Republicans would be expected to attain 5 percent of the total vote) and the Communists would lose up to 2.5 points. This scenario just about guarantees a new five-party coalition. The outgoing Prime Minister, Amintore Fanfani, could be expected to receive the mandate, owing to the good relationship established with the leader of the PSI, Bettino Craxi. Specifically, Fanfani has accommodated the Socialists on a couple of sensitive situations and has moderated the aggressive behavior vis à vis the Socialists by the present Secretary General of the DC, Ciriaco De Mita.

The second scenario calls for an electoral decrease of the Socialists or for an insignificant improvement of the PSI over the last election. This development would portend a strong challenge to Craxi's leadership, a serious loss of authority within the Party and possibly the reemergence of a vigorous leftist current. In turn, the PSI would be compelled to create problems for the Christian Democrats. In the worst hypothesis the PSI could break out of the coalition government. To begin with, it could favor giving the mandate to a DC leader more to its liking, i.e., Arnaldo Forlani. However, Forlani has lost a great deal of credibility and following in the Party. His selection would be a patchwork solution until the Socialists were able to sort out their problems. Precious time would be lost. This scenario could turn out to be more worrisome for all if the Communists were to maintain their position. The other parties would have little or no hold over the unfolding events.

The third scenario, that of a strong Socialist gain, is even less likely. If the PSI were to garner 15 percent or so of the popular vote, Craxi could well demand the Presidency of the Council of Ministers. The DC would refuse, especially if the vote were to preserve their relative majority substantially intact. There is a suspicion, in fact, that Fanfani could retain the premiership on the basis of a secret agreement with Craxi. Subsequently, Fanfani would move to the Presidency of the Republic and Craxi could take over as Prime Minister. Such an arrangement, however, could hardly be countenanced by De Mita, whose political power is growing, both inside and outside the DC.

A test of will between Craxi and De Mita could benefit Giulio Andreotti, who otherwise does not seem destined to receive any mandate to form a new government. Andreotti is trying to recycle himself by pursuing alternatively the Ministry of Foreign Affairs and the Presidency of the Chamber of Deputies. The latter position would place him well in contention for the Presidency of the Republic. However, a confrontation between Andreotti and the present Minister of Foreign Affairs, Emilio Colombo, would scar the DC at a time when the Party needs unity to outmaneuver the Socialists.

Another possibility for the Foreign Ministry could be the present Minister of Defense, Lelio Lagorio -- a Socialist. In terms of U.S. interests, Colombo continues to be preferable, with Lagorio next (The Socialist role is crucial to the deployment of cruise missiles in Sicily.). It is very important for political events in Italy to develop in such a way as to assure Socialist support for a new Comiso-type decision. However, it must be pointed out again that a stronger than expected showing of the Socialists would aggravate personal contrasts with the Christian Democrats, raise the specter of possible PSI-PCI cooperation (in spite of repeated disclaimers by Craxi that the PSI will not play this game), and finally it could stimulate the present DC leadership to make more gestures to the PCI as an antidote to Craxi. All in all, the first scenario is by far the most desirable to the U.S. government. The overall U.S. objective for political stabilization in Italy should be pursued by moderating both De Mita (who should be reminded that the U.S. holds him to the assurances that he has recently given Washington) and Craxi, who should be called upon to dispel certain electoral ambiguities. A quick move toward a five-party agreement is absolutely necessary as Italy is moving toward an economic showdown next fall. Many indicators are quite unfavorable and point to oncoming severe dislocations. The prospect for an anti-inflation policy is particularly bleak. The concerns of the U.S. government should be addressed effectively to the leaders of the five parties. Whatever may be the scenario to be realized by the election, U.S. interests should be evidenced in a more active manner than in the past two years. There is a strong feeling in Italy that the June elections will set the pace for many years to come. It is to be hoped that the increased mistrust of the Communists as a governing party will translate into a loss of votes for the PCI well below the 30 percent mark. Obviously, the U.S. hopes and preoccupations should be communicated to the Italian political leaders by a new, more visible and articulate Ambassador to Rome.

WHITE HOUSE
SITUATION ROOM

MEMORANDUM FOR MR. WILLIAM P. CLARK
THE WHITE HOUSE

SUBJECT: Meeting with President for Italian Socialist Leader

For nearly two years Benedetto (Bettino) Craxi, the young, dynamic and ambitious leader of the Italian Socialist Party (PSI), has been seeking a meeting with the President. We believe that now is an optimum time to extend a formal invitation and we therefore recommend a ten-minute photo opportunity either for the first half of July or preferably in September, closer to actual deployment of INF in Italy. Such a meeting is in the U.S. interest for foreign policy reasons as well as for Italian domestic political considerations.

On the foreign policy front, Craxi has been a stalwart Atlanticist, a good friend of the U.S., and from its inception, an advocate of the INF two-track policy. However, in recent months he has hinted at a reappraisal of his support for actual INF deployment in Italy, while continuing to state that base construction should be completed. We believe these hints are only for the purpose of internal inter-party tactical political maneuvering, but nevertheless a highly publicized meeting with the President would serve to bolster Craxi's commitment to INF, particularly during the crucial final lead up to actual deployments at Comiso. Another objective would be to note U.S. appreciation for the constructive and moderate role Craxi has played in the Socialist International.

On the domestic political scene, since 1976 Craxi has reversed the PSI's downward trend and has parlayed its ten percent of the popular vote into influential pivotal standing between the Christian Democrats and the Communists. Given parliamentary arithmetic, national coalitions which exclude the Communists are impossible to form without PSI support. Now allied in a center-left coalition with the Christian Democrats, the PSI has cooperated quite responsibly in implementing Italy's new economic austerity program. Concurrently, the Socialists are positioning themselves for the next national elections probably in the spring of 1984, following which Craxi is expected to make his bid for the Premiership. His key competitor in that election, Christian Democrat leader Ciriaco De Mita, met with the President on January 13.

An invitaton to Craxi would thus provide the opportunity to deliver a two-fold message: appreciation and encouragement to a key democratic force in Italian politics, as well as a signal that the PSI's Atlanticist posture is worth pursuing and that Craxi's efforts to undercut the Communists on the peace issue are appreciated.
