MEMORANDUM FOR RICHARD DARMAN

FROM:

ELIZABETH H. DOLE

SUBJECT:

Omnibus Legislation to Eliminate Sex-Biased Statutes

Attached is a summary description of statutes identified by the Department of Justice which contain sex bias. Ken Duberstein earlier received this package for appropriate staffing.

The only potential red flag is the sections (pages 7-9) which deal with social security, although most involved no-cost "housekeeping" changes. These can either be included in an omnibus bill or referred to the Greenspan Commission for consideration by that group.

There is considerable interest among the press in this report and the Administration's pending response. Bob Dole intends to introduce legislation to correct the identified statutes during this session of Congress. Inasmuch as there is little time remaining in this session, we should move on this. I suggest that the Legislative Strategy Group consider this matter as soon as possible and either announce the omnibus legislation as an Administration initiative or support legislation introduced by Dole.

This has been cleared by Mike Uhlmann of OPD and Ken Clarkson of OMB.

ADMINISTRATION SUPPORT OF OMNIBUS
LEGISLATION TO ELIMINATE SEX-BIASED STATUTES

As part of Executive Order 12336, the President assigned the Attorney General the task of completing the review of Federal statutes which discriminate on the basis of sex. In June, the Department of Justice transmitted the first quarterly report on sex bias to the Cabinet Council on Legal Policy. This report listed over 120 statutes which appear to be discriminatory. The report is still pending before the Cabinet Council.

Based on informal research conducted by the Senate Judiciary Committee staff, it appears that the majority of the identified statutes (at least 67) are noncontroversial, involve no cost to the government, and can be cured in one piece of omnibus legislation. An omnibus package is recommended for its dramatic effect, and because agency-by-agency transmittals are slow and inefficient. To be safe, the DOJ list is now being cross-referenced with the list completed in 1977 by the U.S. Commission on Civil Rights.

Once the Cabinet Council on Legal Policy meets to discuss the Department of Justice report, curative legislation can go forward. I suspect that we will be far ahead of the game, based on the data I have received to date.

SECTION-BY-SECTION SUMMARY
Legal Equity Act

MILITARY

Army

10 U.S.C. 3683 applies to nurses, women medical specialists and similar employees of the Army Medical Department who received special appointments during World War II. It identifies various periods of service which are creditable for retirement eligibility and for computing retirement pay. It applies only to service completed before January 1, 1949. DOD has indicated that the section is probably obsolete because all personnel with service prior to 1949 should have retired by now. The Act would repeal Section 3683, but contains a grandfather clause in the event that there may be a few persons still on active duty.

10 U.S.C. 3963 also applies to nurses, women medical specialists and similar employees of the Army Medical Department who received special appointments during World War II. It provides that personnel in these categories who served before July 1, 1946 in a higher active duty grade, can be retired in that grade. Again, DOD has indicated that the section is probably obsolete as anyone with service prior to 1946 should have retired by now. The Act would repeal Section 3963, but contains a grandfather clause in the event that there may be a few persons still on active duty.

10 U.S.C. 4309 allows "members of armed forces and able-bodied males capable of bearing arms" to use rifle ranges operated by the Secretary of the Army. The Act would amend Section 4309 by changing "males" to "persons".

10 U.S.C. 4651 allows the Secretary of the Army to provide equipment to any school that does not have an ROTC unit but does have a course in military training and at least "100 physically fit male students". The Act would amend Section 4651 by deleting "male".

10 U.S.C. 4712(d) contains the priority list for the disposition of effects of deceased military personnel by summary court martial. The list gives preference to a "son" over a "daughter" a "father" over a "mother" and a "brother" over a "sister". The Act would amend Section 4712(d) so that family members are treated on a sex-neutral basis.

10 U.S.C. 4713(a)(2) contains the same priority list for the disposition of effects of certain deceased military personnel which have been held by the Army for three years after death. The Act would amend Section 4713(a)(2) so that family members are treated on a sex-neutral basis.

24 U.S.C. 52 allows the inmate of a soldier's home to have the inmate's pension paid to a "child, wife, or parent living". The Act would amend Section 52 by replacing "wife" with "spouse".

50 U.S.C. 1591 - 1598. All sections refer to P.L. 78-3509, which provided temporary appointments for Army Nurse Corp members, women medical specialists or similar employees of the Army Medical Department. They contain separate standards for these classes of female personnel in such areas as retirement grade and pay, computation of length of service, uniform allowance, rank, pay and travel allowances. P.L. 78-3509 was passed only for World War II and is now, therefore, obsolete. The Act would repeal these provisions.

Navy

10 U.S.C. 5896-99, generally provides separate promotion consideration for men and women among Naval and Marine Corps Reserve officers. A DOD Task Force charged with the responsibility of reviewing and proposing comprehensive reforms in the reserve system (ROPMA Study Group) has already recommended that such distinctions be eliminated. The Act would amend Section 5896-99 so that Naval and Marine Corps Reserve officers receive the same promotion consideration, regardless of sex.

10 U.S.C. 6403 authorizes the Secretary of the Navy to eliminate women officers from active duty status in the Naval and Marine Corps Reserve. Again, the ROPMA Study Group has already recommended that this section should be repealed, so that women can be eliminated from active status only under the same conditions that would require men from being eliminated from the active list. The Act would repeal Section 6403.

10 U.S.C. 7601 lists, among others, the "widows" but not the widowers of members of the Navy as persons who may use commissaries. The Act would amend Section 7601 by replacing "widows" with "surviving spouses".

Air Force

10 U.S.C. 8683 applies to nurses, women medical specialists and similar employees of the Air Force Medical Department who received special appointments during World War II. It identifies various periods of service which are creditable for retirement eligibility and for computing retirement pay. It applies only to service completed before January 1, 1949. DOD has indicated that the section is probably obsolete because all personnel with service prior to 1949 should have retired by now. The Act would repeal Section 3583, but contains a grandfather clause in the event that there might still be a few persons on active duty.

10 U.S.C. 8848(b) allows the Secretary of the Air Force to retain on active duty nurses, medical specialists and female line officers who are in the reserve grade of lieutenant colonel until the completion of 30 years of active service. 8848(b) was added in 1960 to provide a continuation of authority for these categories since they were limited to 25 years by 10 U.S.C. 8847. However, Section 8847 was repealed in 1967, making Section 8848(b) obsolete. The Act would repeal Section 8848(b).

10 U.S.C. 8963 applies to nurses, women medical specialists and similar employees of the Air Force Medical Department who received special appointments during World War II. It provides that personnel in these categories who served before July 1, 1946 in a higher active duty grade, can be retired in that grade. Again, DOD has indicated that the Section is probably obsolete as anyone with service prior to 1946 should have retired by now. The Act would repeal Section 8963, but contains a grandfather clause in the event that there may still be a few persons on active duty.

10 U.S.C. 9651 allows the Secretary of the Air Force to provide equipment to any school that does not have an ROTC unit but does have a course in military training and at least "100 physically fit male students". The Act would amend Section 9651 by deleting "male".

10 U.S.C. 9712 contains the priority list for the disposition of effects of deceased military personnel by summary court martial. As is the case with the Army, it gives priority to male family members. The Act would amend Section 9712 so that family members are treated on a sex-neutral basis.

10 U.S.C. 9713 contains the same priority list for the disposition of effects of deceased military personnel by a Soldier's home and would be amended so that family members are treated on a sex-neutral basis.

Coast Guard

(The Coast Guard now allows women to participate in all components of the service. Neutralizing these provisions will simply bring the pertinent code provisions into conformity with current practices.)

14 U.S.C. 371 provides that only "male citizens ... may be enlisted as" and "male enlisted members of the Coast Guard ... may be designated as aviation cadets". The Act would amend Section 371 by deleting "male". (The DOJ report indicated that the Coast Guard no longer has aviation cadets. However, because the Coast Guard may wish to resurrect the program in the future, the Section should be amended, not repealed.)

14 U.S.C. 487 lists, among others, the "widows" but not the widowers of members of the Coast Guard as persons who may use commissaries. The Act would amend Section 487 by replacing "widows" with "surviving spouses".

46 U.S.C. 599 allows for the allotment of a portion of sailor's wages to "his grandparents, parents, wife, sister or children". The Act would amend Section 599 to permit allotment of wages to the "sailor's grandparents, parents, spouse, sibling, or children".

46 U.S.C. 561 allows for the apprenticing only of "boys" to the sea service. The Act would amend Section 561 by replacing "boys" with "youths".

Benefits for Spouses and Families

5 U.S.C. 2108(3)(f)&(g) provide for benefits to be paid to "mothers" but not fathers of disabled veterans or other individuals who lost their lives during active duty under certain sets of circumstances. The Act would amend Section 2108(3)(f)&(g) so that both parents of the veteran would be eligible for benefits if they met the criteria specified in the statute.

30 U.S.C. 902(a) defines, for purposes of black lung benefits, a "dependent" as including "wife" and "widow" but not husbands and widowers. 30 U.S.C. 843(d), 902(e), 902(g), 921, 922(a), 922(b), 923(b), 924(a)&(e), 931, and 934 also contain the sex-based references of "wife" and "widow" as a result of this definition of "dependent". These sections would be amended so that "wife" is replaced with "spouse" and "widow" is replaced with "surviving spouse". The Department of Labor has already so amended its regulations, so the amendment would simply conform the statutes to current practices.

42 U.S.C. 1652 is a little used section of the Defense Base Compensation Act. It provides that compensation to "dependents" of aliens and nonnationals includes the "wife" but not the husband. The section would be amended by replacing "wife" with "spouse".

33 U.S.C. 771 & 772 provide survivor's benefits for the "widows" but not the widowers of Lighthouse Service Personnel. The Act would amend Sections 771 & 772 by replacing "widows" with "surviving spouse". (The Lighthouse Service is no longer a separate service of the Coast Guard and the class of persons to whom Sections 771 & 772 applies is extremely small, if any.)

18 U.S.C. 3056 provides only for Secret Service protection of a former President's "wife" or "widow". The Act would amend Section 3056 by changing "wife" to "spouse" and "widow" to "surviving spouse".

28 U.S.C. 604 allows the Director of the Administrative Office of the U.S. Courts to regulate and pay annuities to "widows" of judges. P.L. 94-544 extended benefits to both the widows and widowers of judges on a sex-neutral basis, but failed to correct Section 604. The Act would amend Section 604 by replacing "widow" with "surviving spouse".

Immigration and Naturalization

8 U.S.C. 1557 prohibits the transportation in foreign commerce of "women and girls" for the purposes of prostitution and debauchery. The Act would amend Section 1557 by replacing "women and girls" with "adults and youths".

8 U.S.C. 1353 authorizes payment of the transportation expenses of the "wives" and dependent children of employees of INS performing duties in foreign countries. The Act would amend Section 1353 by providing for the expenses of "spouses" of INS employees, consistent with current practice.

*8 U.S.C. 1452 provides procedures to procure certificates of citizenship for persons who derived U.S. citizenship through the naturalization of a parent or "husband". The Act would amend Section 1452 by changing "husband" to "spouse".

*8 U.S.C. 1451(e) provides that the revocation of a person's citizenship or naturalization shall not affect any right or privilege of the person's "wife" or minor child which would have derived if the revocation had not occurred. The Act would amend Section 1451(e) by changing "wife" to "spouse".

*8 U.S.C. 1489 provides that notwithstanding any treaty or convention to the contrary no "woman" is to lose U.S. nationality because of marriage to an alien, or through residence abroad following such a marriage. The Act would amend Section 1489 by changing "woman" to "person".

*These statutes are "protective" in nature. That is, they were designed to protect women from laws existing in the early part of the century in this country, and the customs and conventions of foreign countries, making the legal status of a woman dependent on that of her husband. Because there are no similar known laws, customs, or conventions affecting men, neutralizing the language will not bestow any additional citizenship rights, priveleges, etc. that exist under current law.

22 U.S.C. 214 excuses the payment of passport fees for a "widow" of a deceased member of the Armed Forces who is travelling abroad to visit the grave of the deceased. The Act would amend Section 214 by changing "widow" to "surviving spouse".

Social Security*

42 U.S.C. 402(b), (c), (e) & (f) provides for the payment of benefits to aged divorced wives and aged or disabled surviving divorced wives, but benefits are not provided for similarly situated men. These provisions have been held unconstitutional in a number of court decisions and benefits are currently also being paid to aged divorced husbands and aged surviving divorced husbands, based on their former wives' earnings. The Act would amend these Sections so that they conform with current practice. (No cost impact.)

42 U.S.C. 402(b) & (g) provide benefits for a mother who has in her care a child of her retired, disabled, or deceased husband. Benefits are not provided for similarly situated men. This distinction was held unconstitutional in Weinberger v Wiesenfeld, 420 U.S. 636 (1975), other court decisions and subsequent administrative decisions. Currently a similarly situated father can also qualify for benefits based on his retired, disabled, or deceased wife's past earnings. The Act would amend these Sections to conform to current practice. (No cost impact.)

42 U.S.C. 402(f) provides that widows and widowers who remarry before age 50 are treated differently with respect to their eligibility for benefits based on their deceased spouses' earnings. A woman may qualify for benefits as a surviving spouse, even though she has remarried, so long as she is not married at the time she applies for benefits. A man on the other hand, currently loses forever his eligibility as a surviving spouse of his deceased working wife if he remarries before age 60. This distinction was held to be unconstitutional in Mertz v Harris, 497 F. Supp. 1134 (S.D. Tex. 1980) and benefits are now paid to widowers who have remarried but are not married at the time of application. The Act would amend this Section to conform to current practice. (No cost impact.)

*The cost impact analysis of eliminating gender-based distinctions in the Social Security Act was done in late 1980. "Nominal" means less than 1/2 million dollars.

42 U.S.C. 402(d) provides benefits for the dependent children of disabled, retired, or deceased workers. Under this section, these benefits will terminate when the child marries, unless the child is over 18 and marries a person who is also entitled to Social Security benefits. If the disabled beneficiary is a male and he recovers or engages in substantial work, his benefits are terminated and his wife's benefits are terminated. If, however, the disabled beneficiary is a woman, only her benefits are terminated. A challenge to this distinction is pending in Cimaglia v Harris, No. 78-6353 (S.D. Fla.). The Act would amend this Section so that benefits would be terminated, regardless of sex, if the spouse is no longer eligible for benefits. (Nominal cost impact.)

42 U.S.C. 403 & 405 refer to benefit categories established by the preceding sections and would be amended to conform to the amendments made to those sections.

42 U.S.C. 411. Currently, in community property states, all income from a business owned or operated by a married couple is deemed, for purposes of Social Security, to be the husband's, unless the wife exercises substantially all the management and control. In all other States, such self-employment income is credited to the spouse who owns or is predominantly active in the business. This distinction was found to be unconstitutional in Carrasco v Califano, 628 F. 2d 62 (1st Circuit 1980), Hester v Harris, 531 F. 2d 53 (5th Circuit 1980), and Becker v Harris, 493 F. Supp. 991 (S.D. Calif. 1980). The self-employment income of a married couple in a community property state is currently treated the same as such income in non-community property states. The Act would amend this Section to conform to current practices. (Nominal cost impact.)

42 U.S.C. 413(a). Under this provision, certain workers who attained age 72 before 1969 are eligible for Social Security benefits under transitional insured status provisions which require fewer quarters of coverage than would ordinarily be required. Wives and widows of eligible male workers who reached 72 prior to 1969 also are eligible for benefits under this provision, but husbands and widowers of eligible female workers are not. The Act would amend this Section to extend transitional insured status to such husbands and widowers. (Nominal cost impact.)

42 U.S.C. 416 relates to benefits for illegitimate children. In general, the determination of one's status as a parent or child for purposes of the Social Security program is based upon the intestate succession laws of the state in which the insured individual is domiciled. However, an illegitimate child may be eligible for benefits based upon a man's earnings, without regard to the appropriate state intestate laws, if, among other things, the man has been decreed by a court to be the father of the child, or the man is shown by evidence satisfactory to the Secretary to be the father of the child. Similar provisions do not currently apply when an illegitimate child claims a benefit based upon his mother's earnings. The Act would amend this Section so that illegitimate children would be eligible for benefits based on their mother's earnings as they are currently for benefits based on their father's earnings. (Nominal cost impact.)

42 U.S.C. 417 permits the widow of a veteran, under certain circumstances, to waive her right to a civil service survivor's annuity and receive credit for military service prior to 1957 for purposes of determining eligibility for, or the amount of, Social Security survivor's benefits. The Act would amend this Section to extend the same option to widowers. (Nominal cost impact.)

42 U.S.C. 422, 425, and 426 refer to benefits categories established by Section 402 (listed above and would be amended to accordingly).

42 U.S.C. 427 and 428 authorize benefits for certain uninsured individuals who attained age 72 prior to 1972. In order for a couple to receive benefits under this section, both spouses must have attained age 72 prior to 1972. However, even though each spouse must meet the same eligibility requirements he or she would have to meet if not married, once the eligibility of both is determined, the couple is treated as if the husband were the retired worker and the wife were the dependent. The amount of the special payment of the couple is not divided equally between husband and wife. Rather, the payment is allocated so that the husband is paid 2/3 and the wife is paid 1/3. The Act would amend these Sections so that the payment is equally divided between the two. (Nominal cost impact.)

Welfare

42 U.S.C. 633 gives priority for placement in the WIN program first, to unemployed fathers, and then to mothers. The Act would amend Section 633 by giving a uniform category of preference to "unemployed parents". (The Administration has recommended the termination of the WIN program, though the Congress may decide to continue funding.)

Department of Agriculture

45 U.S.C. 1773(c) concerns the priority to be given to the selection of schools for participation in the school breakfast program. One of the factors listed to consider is whether there is a special need to improve the dietary practices of working "mothers". The Act would amend Section 1773(c) by changing "mothers" to "parents".

Department of Commerce

46 U.S.C. 331 abolishes customs and other fees for certain services to U.S. vessels. One of these services is the apprenticing of "boys" to the merchant service. The Act would amend Section 331 by changing "boys" to "youths".

46 U.S.C. 601 prohibits the attachment of seaman's wages unless attached pursuant to a court order regarding the payment of support and maintenance for the seaman's "wife and minor children". The Act would amend Section 601 by replacing "wife" with "spouse".

Bureau of Indian Affairs

25 U.S.C. 13 authorizes the Bureau of Indian Affairs to direct, supervise and expend monies for the benefit, care and assistance of Indians for a number of specified purposes, including the employment of "field matrons". BIA has advised that this particular provision is obsolete. The Act would amend Section 13 by deleting "field matrons".

25 U.S.C. 137 was enacted in 1875 and authorizes an agent distributing supplies on an Indian reservation to require "able-bodied Indian males" to perform certain services for the benefit of a tribe. The Act would repeal Section 137.

*25 U.S.C. 181 provides that a white man may not acquire a right to tribal property by marrying an Indian woman. The Act would amend Section 181 by providing that no "non-Indian" may acquire a right to tribal property by marrying an Indian.

25 U.S.C. 182 provides that an Indian woman who marries a U.S. citizen also becomes a U.S. citizen, but does not lose any tribal property rights. Section 182 was made obsolete by the Indian Citizenship Act. The Act would repeal Section 182.

*25 U.S.C. 183 specifies the type of evidence which is required to prove a marriage between a "white man" and "Indian woman". The Act would amend Section 183 by changing "white man" to "non-Indian" and deleting "woman".

*25 U.S.C. 184 provides that the children of a marriage solemnized prior to June 7, 1897, between a "white man" and an "Indian woman" shall have the same rights and privileges as other members of the "mothers" tribe. The Act would amend Section 184 so that the children of marriages between a "non-Indian" and an "Indian" will have the rights and privileges of the "parents" tribe.

25 U.S.C. 274 authorizes the Commissioner of Indian Affairs to employ "Indian girls as Assistant matrons" and "Indian boys as farmers and industrial teachers". The Act would amend Section 274 by allowing the Commissioner to employ Indian "youths" as "dormitory aides" and "as farmers and industrial teachers", consistent with current practice.

25 U.S.C. 342 permits the removal of Southern Utes to a new reservation without the consent of the "adult male" tribal members. Section 342 is obsolete and would be repealed by the Act.

25 U.S.C. 371 provides that illegitimate Indian children are the legitimate issue of their father for the purpose of determining descent of land. The Act would amend Section 371 to provide that illegitimate children are the legitimate issue of both parents for such purposes.

*Sections 181, 183, and 184 were all designed to protect Indian women from tribal customs giving the non-Indian spouse all her tribal property rights, and divesting the children of such marriages of tribal property rights. Because there are no similar tribal customs applying to men, deleting the gender-based distinctions will have no substantive impact.

Under the applicable tribal customs and common law principles, illegitimate children are also deemed the legitimate issue of the mother. Thus, deleting the gender-based distinctions in Section 371 will have no substantive impact.

Homesteading*

43 U.S.C. 161 and 162 allows a citizen or a person intending to become a citizen, who has reached the age of 21, or who is "the head of a family" to be entitled to enter unappropriated public lands. Under state statutes, federal regulations and the common law, the "head of a family" customarily refers to the husband or the father. The Act would amend Sections 161 and 162 to clarify that either spouse or parent is entitled to entry.

43 U.S.C. 164 sets forth the rules for the issuance of certificates or patents. The provisions applicable when the enterer dies refer only to the "widow". The Act would amend Section 164 by replacing "widow" with "surviving spouse".

43 U.S.C. 166 provides that an unmarried female settler does not forfeit her rights to enter upon marriage so long as she does not abandon her residence. Section 166 also provides, however, that she forfeits her rights if the man she marries claims a separate tract under the homestead laws. The Act would amend Section 166 by eliminating the provision requiring the woman to forfeit her rights if her husband claims a separate tract, and extends to both sexes the requirement that they must continue to reside on the tract if they wish to make entry.

43 U.S.C. 167 provides that the marriage of two homesteaders does not impair either's right to a patent, but gives the husband the right to choose the family's domicile. The Act would amend Section 167 so that both husband and wife must elect together on which tract they wish to live.

43 U.S.C. 168 provides that the marriage of a female enterer to an alien does not impair the females entitlement to a certificate or patent. The provision was designed to protect women from the once prevalent legal doctrine that if a female citizen marries an alien she forfeits her citizenship. Since this legal doctrine no longer applies, Section 168 is obsolete and would be repealed by the Act.

43 U.S.C. 170 provides certain protections to the "wives" of enterers who are deserted. The Act would amend Section 170 to provide the same protections to either spouse if they have been deserted.

*The Homesteading provisions amended by the Act now only apply to the state of Alaska, and will no longer be effective after 1986.

43 U.S.C. 240, 243(a), 255, 271, 272, 278 and 279 permit service personnel and their families to count service time toward homestead entry requirements. All sections assume that service personnel are only male, referring only to the "wives" and "widows" of service personnel. The Act would amend the Sections by replacing "wife" with "spouse" and "widow" with "surviving spouse", and clarifying that service personnel includes persons of both sexes.

Department of Justice

42 U.S.C. 1986 creates a cause of action for damages resulting from a wrongful conspiracy. The section provides that if death results from the conspiracy, the deceased's legal representative can recover damages for the benefit of the "widow" and if there is no widow, to the "next of kin". The Act would amend Section 1986 by replacing "widow" with "surviving spouse".

Railroad Retirement Board

45 U.S.C. 231a(c)(1)(ii)(C) pertains to retirement benefits for the spouses of retired employees. Generally, the spouse of a retired employee will not be eligible for benefits unless the spouse has also reached retirement age. The exception is for a "wife" when the couple has dependent children in their care. The Act would amend this Section to also provide benefits to the husbands of female retired employees where the husband has not yet reached retirement age and the couple still has dependent children. (Nominal cost impact.)

45 U.S.C. 231a(d)(1). This Section entitles a widow, surviving divorced wife, and surviving divorced mother to annuity benefits, but not to similarly situated males. These eligibility provisions are based on definitions contained in Section 216 of the Social Security Act, which, as previously mentioned, have been held unconstitutional. The Railroad Retirement Board currently pays benefits to widowers, surviving divorced husbands, and surviving divorced fathers. The Act would amend this Section to conform to current practice.

45 U.S.C. 231e(a)(2) was amended by the Omnibus Reconciliation Act in this Congress (P.L. 97-35) and the sex based distinction contained in it was simply a drafting error. A code section of the Social Security Act was used as a guide, even though the particular section used has been held unconstitutional. The section, as written, provides eligibility for lump-sum payments where an individual has died leaving no "widow, surviving divorced wife, or widower", but not requiring there to be no surviving divorced husband. The Act would amend this Section to include a requirement that there also be no surviving divorced husband. (No cost impact.)

U.S. Congress

31 U.S.C. 97 allows the GAO to disallow a claim for arrears of pay and bounty where payment in full has already been made to the soldier or to his "widow" or legal heirs. The Act would amend Section 97 by replacing "his widow" with the "soldiers surviving spouse". Curative legislation has already passed the House, (see, H.R. 6128 making a number of revisions to Title 31), though has not yet passed the Senate.

31 U.S.C. 43(b) sets out survivorship benefits for the "widows" but not the widowers of Comptrollers Generals and assumes that all Comptroller Generals are male. The Act would amend Section 43(b) by replacing "widow" with "surviving spouse". (Again, curative legislation has already passed the House. See H.R. 6128.)

Miscellaneous

24 U.S.C. 165 provides that pensions of male inmates of St. Elizabeth's may be used for the benefit of their "wives and minor children," but pensions of female inmates may be used only for the benefit of "minor children". The Act would amend Section 165 by allowing pensions to be used for the benefit of both the "spouse and minor children" of female inmates.

24 U.S.C. 191 provides that St. Elizabeth's may admit insane civilians of the Quarter Master Corps and "men" who were insane while in military service and become insane again after discharge. The Act would amend Section 191 by replacing "men" with "persons".

48 U.S.C. 1461 provides that no polygamist or bigamist or woman cohabiting with the same may vote or hold office in a U.S. Territory. The provision is of questionable constitutionality and in any event no longer has any known substantive application. The Act would repeal Section 1461.

31 U.S.C. 125 concerns payments from special deposit accounts for veterans of withheld foreign checks. The section contains a priority list for the payment of the remains of these accounts upon the death of the veteran. First priority goes to the "widow" and no provision is made for widowers. The section would be amended by replacing "widow" with "surviving spouse". (Again, curative legislation has already passed the House. See H.R. 6128.)

41 U.S.C. 35 and 36 establish minimum age levels for persons able to enter into contracts with executive departments, independent agencies, etc. The minimum age for males is 16 but for females, 18. DOL has already amended its regulation to provide the same minimum age of 16 for both sexes. The Act would amend Sections 35 and 36 to conform to current practice.

CODE SECTIONS IDENTIFIED WHICH WOULD NOT BE AMENDED BY THE ACT

A. Controversial Code Sections

Military

10 U.S.C. 6015 (Department of Navy) prohibits women in combat.

10 U.S.C. 8549 (Air Force) prohibits women in combat.

50 U.S.C. App. 453-456, 466 Selective Service Provisions.

Immigration and Naturalization

8 U.S.C. 1101(b)(1)(D), 1409, 1432 provide that children born out of wedlock are deemed to have acquired the nationality status of their mother, but not their father, and thus relates to the sensitive issue of the citizenship status of children fathered by American military personnel overseas.

8 U.S.C. 1101(a)(42), 1182(e), 1253(h)(1) all provide protections to aliens fleeing from countries because of persecution based on race, religion, nationality, etc. Sex is not a protected category. These Code Sections implement the U.N. Convention Relating to the Status of Refugees. (Adopted in 1951. U.S. became signatory in 1968.) The convention is not self-executing. To date, U.S. laws have been implemented and applied consistent with the Convention, but have not gone beyond it. Inclusion of "sex" as a protected category would extend beyond the Convention and could have a significant impact on the number of refugees allowed in the U.S., particularly in light of the 2nd class status all women are subjected to in many Moslem countries.

Miscellaneous

42 U.S.C. 1395mm(a)(3)(A)(iv) permits the Health Care Financing Administration to use sex as an actuarial factor in determining payments to HMOs. It is not used in any way to discriminate against women in terms of benefits or rates. Relates to the controversial issue of whether insurance companies should be able to use sex in computing benefits and rates.

B. Code Sections Already Cured or Containing no Facial Substantive Bias

Military

10 U.S.C. 3504 repealed P.L. 96-513, Title II, Section 210, 12/12/80.

10 U.S.C. 3848 (Separate Section for women repealed 1960 P.L. 86-559.)

10 U.S.C. 3888 repealed 96-513 12/12/80.

10 U.S.C. 3927 Repealed P.L. 96-513 12/12/80.

24 U.S.C. 44a repealed 94-454 10/2/76.

14 U.S.C. 372, 373 and 10 U.S.C. 6912, 6913 and 6915 provide benefits for aviation cadets. They contain no facial sex-bias. Presumably were listed because 14 U.S.C. 371 and 10 U.S.C. 6015 do not allow women to be aviation cadets, and therefore women would not be eligible for those benefits. (14 U.S.C. 371 would be cured by Act.)

33 U.S.C. 773, 774 and 775 contain no facial sex-bias.

33 U.S.C. 482 doesn't exist.

Benefits for Spouses and Families

28 U.S.C. 375 repealed P.L. 96-504(1980).

Welfare

42 U.S.C. 602, 602(a)(19)(A), and 602(a)(19)(G)(iv) have all been cured in this Congress by P.L. 97-35 (Omnibus Reconciliation Act).

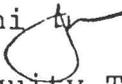

Department of Agriculture

7 U.S.C. 1923 was cured in this Congress by P.L. 97-98.

MEMORANDUM FOR ELIZABETH DOLE

FROM: Jim Cicconi
SUBJECT: Women's Equity Task Force

You asked that I examine whether the executive order setting up the Task Force on Legal Equity for Women requires the Task Force to consider recommended changes in the law before the President supports them.

Under the terms of the order, the Task Force deals solely with "Federal regulations, policies and practices," which discriminate on the basis of sex. Since the changes recommended by the Justice Department report involve federal laws, there appears to be no need to convene the Task Force. This is not to say that such a meeting, if there were more time, might not have public relations advantages. In this instance, however, it is probably sufficient to be able to say that the changes were considered by our new Coordinating Council on Women's Issues.

It should be pointed out that the executive order states that, once the Justice Department's quarterly report is complete, such findings are reported "to the President through the Cabinet Council on Legal Policy." Though the CCLP has not formerly met to discuss the report, all members of the Council received a copy for their review on August 24. Under the circumstances, it can be argued that the procedural requirements of the order have been met if the President has been made aware of the findings via Craig Fuller or Ed Meese.

MEMORANDUM FOR LEGISLATIVE STRATEGY GROUP

FROM: ELIZABETH H. DOLE

SUBJECT: Omnibus Legislation to Eliminate Sex-Biased Statutes

Attached is a copy of the draft language for the bill which Senator Dole's staff was preparing for introduction. This draft incorporates all the changes in the earlier circulated document citing possible changes. Feedback indicates that the bill is acceptable with the following caveats:

- Remove* {
1. All items referring to Social Security are to be struck and referred by transmittal letter to the Blue Ribbon panel;
 2. Concern about the revenue impact of changes in the Railroad Retirement act will be raised by OMB after having earlier signed off on the package; and
 3. Child Nutrition - Some concern regarding draft bill language which will be reviewed by Counsel today. The intent is to make sure that this statute gives preference to lower-income families, single working heads of households, and children of families where both parents work.
- cost impact being studied* {
- new language being worked out* {

In view of the concerns expressed over Railroad Retirement, suggest this group task OMB to immediately analyze the cost in order that a determination can be made on inclusion prior to transmittal of legislation to the Hill.

I. Introduction and Summary

President Reagan signed Executive Order 12336 on December 21, 1981, establishing the Task Force on Legal Equity for Women (hereinafter the "Task Force"). The mission of the Task Force is to ensure "the systematic elimination of regulatory and procedural barriers which have unfairly precluded women from receiving equal treatment from Federal activities." See Appendix A, infra. The Attorney General (or his designee) has been assigned responsibility to complete a review of Federal laws, regulations, policies and practices, and to identify and periodically report to the President on any language or provision that tolerates discrimination on the basis of sex.^{1/} This is the first such report by the Department of Justice.

The drive to cleanse Federal laws of impermissible gender-based classifications is certainly not new with this Administration. For several years, federal statutes and regulations needlessly providing for inequitable treatment of the sexes have been targeted for revision or elimination. Pursuant to Presidential directive, a comprehensive plan was developed in 1976 for review of the United States Code in order to locate all such offensive statutory provisions. This effort was expanded the following year to include a similar review by the Federal agencies of their rules, regulations, policies and practices.

The preliminary results of this identification activity are set forth in a report issued in 1978 by the Civil Rights Division of the Department of Justice (the "1978 Report"). It reveals that more than 3,000 Code sections have been identified as containing some form of sex bias; however, a large majority of these involve only terminology problems of a non-substantive nature and either already have been remedied or are readily curable. In addition, even as to substantively discriminatory laws the 1978 Report confirms that most of them are drawn so narrowly as to have little impact on the populace generally, or even on any sizeable number of people. Thus, the dimension of the statutory problem identified by the Justice Department, while not inconsequential, is plainly not overwhelming. The next section of this Report provides an overview and update of the legislative review activity that has thus far been undertaken and comments briefly on future steps to be taken in this area.

Following the discussion on statutory reforms, the Report sets forth in Part III similar information with regard to the ongoing review of rules and regulations by Federal agencies. Because federal regulations have only recently begun to be incorporated into computer retrieval systems, the search for sex-oriented language in agency regulations has proceeded at a slower pace than with the statutes. Nonetheless, real progress continues to be made toward fulfillment of the overarching objective to rid the laws of this country of unjustified sex biases. Continuing activities designed to bring into full compliance all regulatory schemes throughout the Federal government will be outlined.

The Report finally identifies several major issues that directly affect women's rights, and describes recent developments, due in no small part to efforts of this Administration, that have contributed greatly toward removal of the offensive features of the identified program. Also mentioned in the concluding section are some of the remaining areas of controversy in the field of sex discrimination that are receiving the attention of this Administration.

II. Review of Federal Statutes

The United States Code has been examined on several occasions to ascertain which federal statutes contain language that differentiates solely on the basis of sex. As might be expected, the results of these surveys have not been uniform. For example, one computer search performed in 1977 by the United States Commission on Civil Rights identified some 800 Code Sections having a sexual bias. Another study undertaken by the Justice Department later the same year, which was based on a more comprehensive computer search, produced over 3,000 Code Sections containing gender-specific language.

It is probably fair to say that there currently remain on the books a sizeable number of federal statutes that are framed in masculine terms only. Nonetheless, only relatively few such Code provisions are so worded that they will not permit a sex-neutral interpretation, and the courts have not been at all hesitant in recent years to adopt this more expansive reading. Consequently, sex-biased terminology in most instances under federal law has little substantive importance.

Moreover, Congress has in recent years enacted specific legislation designed to equalize treatment of the sexes under federal statutes. For example, 1 U.S.C. § 1 now provides: "in determining the meaning of any Act of Congress, unless the context indicates otherwise -- . . . words importing the masculine gender include the feminine as well; . . ." To be sure, this provision does not remove all "sex discrimination" concerns, since use of the masculine gender in some statutes is in a context that reveals a clear congressional intent to cover men only. Nonetheless, this curative legislation helps in many instances.

So, too, does enactment by Congress of 5 U.S.C. 7202(c), which provides that "notwithstanding any other provision of law, any provision of law providing a benefit to a male Federal employee or his spouse or family shall be deemed to provide the same benefit to a female Federal employee or to her spouse or family." Here, again, the legislation has identifiable limitations -- in that it applies only to Federal employees and may well not include members of the Armed Forces, the U.S. Postal Service, independent Commissions (see, e.g., 5 U.S.C. § 2105), and the career foreign service. Nonetheless, it benefits a large group of women in this country employed by the Federal Government by removing for them yet another gender-based barrier.^{2/}

There still remain, of course, substantive sections of the Code that differentiate solely on the basis of sex. We have collected in an appendix to this Report (Appendix B, infra) an updated list of such sex-biased statutes requiring corrective action by Congress. For the most part, these Code provisions can be lumped into five general categories, each of which embraces a single policy area: military, social security, welfare, spousal and family benefits, and immigration. This, in essence, defines the dimensions of the legislative problem.^{3/}

^{2/} See also 38 U.S.C § 102(b), dealing with veterans benefits, which provides that, for purposes of this title of the U.S. Code, any reference to wife includes husband and any reference to widow includes widower. This provision, however, applies only to Title 38 and therefore does not cure other veterans benefits statutes in other Titles of the Code containing sex-biased language.

^{3/} We would not want to be misunderstood on this point. In some respects, the different treatment on the basis of sex that remains in these five areas could be tied to legitimate policy objectives that do not require complete change. For example, the limitation on women in combat accounts for the differentiation in many military statutes. Careful scrutiny is required in determining whether, and to what extent, a restructuring of that legislation into sex neutral terms should take place.

However, to ensure that there is no mistake in this regard, we are about to undertake a final computer search of the United States Code and will hopefully be in a position at the time of the next report to verify that, indeed, there no longer linger any vestiges of unjustifiable sex discrimination in the vast majority of federal statutes.^{4/}

III. Review of Agency Rules, Regulations and Policies

The task of identifying Federal rules, regulations, programs and policies that tolerate disparate treatment on account of sex was assigned some years ago to each Federal agency. An interim account of the progress of that effort was contained in the 1978 Report, covering some 63 federal agencies. Our recent review of the status of that original undertaking revealed that most agencies have now completed the "identification" of sex bias in their rules, regulations, programs and policies, but many have yet to take corrective action to cure existing discriminatory provisions or practices. At least two principal agencies, the Department of Health and Human Resources and the Department of Education, are still in "identification" stage and have not reported their findings on the threshold inquiry. Moreover, agency regulations are currently being computerized, thus allowing a more thorough search in the future.

^{4/} No comprehensive computer search has been made since 1977. In a few instances since then Congress has actually enacted new sex-biased statutes (for example, amendments to the Railroad Retirement Act of 1974, 45 U.S.C. § 231e, Pub. L. No. 97-35). A current computer search is therefore needed to complete the Justice Department's assignment.

Even so, some general observations can be made that will help to frame the broader issue. We have verified that the review undertaken by twenty-two (22) small agencies disclosed no substantive distinctions in their rules, regulations, programs or practices based on sex.^{5/}

In addition, five (5) other agencies whose reviews had identified areas of possible sex bias have now resolved or corrected the identified problem and are no longer a matter of concern. One of these, the Federal Reserve System, has by regulation altered its requirements with respect to official advertising materials displayed by State-chartered banks so as to include an explicit prohibition against sex discrimination. Another, the National Aeronautics and Space Administration

^{5/} These agencies include the following: Appalachian Regional Commission; Arms Control & Disarmament Agency; Board for International Broadcasting; Commodity Futures Trading Commission; Consumer Product Safety Commission; Federal Deposit Insurance Corporation; Federal Election Commission; Federal Maritime Commission; Federal Mediation & Conciliation Service; Federal Trade Commission; Government Printing Office; Indian Claims Commission; Inter-American Foundation; National Labor Relations Board; National Mediation Board; National Transportation Safety Board; Nuclear Regulatory Commission; Occupational Safety and Health Review Commission; President's Council on Physical Fitness; Tennessee Valley Authority; United States International Trade Commission; United States Postal Service. In a few of these agencies, where unnecessary gender-specific terminology had been used in the past, a directive was issued which prohibited the use of such language in all newly proposed or revised regulations (e.g., Federal Election Commission, Federal Maritime Commission).

(NASA), has made material changes in its selection procedures and criteria for the Astronaut Candidate Program to open new opportunities for women. Still another, the Securities and Exchange Commission (SEC), has begun to look more closely at corporate equal employment opportunity (EEO) information as being subject to disclosure in appropriate cases under the SEC's "material information" rule. Also in this group is the United States International Communication Agency (USICA), which has developed new guidelines for equal treatment of the sexes in USICA media matters. And finally, there is the National Transportation Safety Board, which has agreed to embark on a more active recruitment program for women for trainee positions due to the low female representation among the Board's accident investigators.

Of the remaining thirty-four (34) reporting agencies (HHS and DOE have still to report), specific instances of sex-bias practices or procedures have been identified in one form or another, and, in varying degrees, steps are being taken to remove the discriminatory features in question. A principal area of activity for the Task Force will be the monitoring of this corrective action on an agency-by-agency basis to ensure that women are not denied opportunities under any federal program solely because of their sex.

The prospects of such a denial, it should be added, are becoming increasingly remote. In this connection, the Justice Department's recent review of agency attention to these matters since the 1978 Report has been most encouraging. For example, a painstaking reexamination of regulations by the Department of Commerce revealed not one substantive gender-biased provision. A similarly thorough combing of the many other component documents issued by the Commerce Department disclosed only a few offending terms, all of which are non-substantive in nature and have already been scheduled for correction in the next regular revision of periodicals.

The Department of Agriculture (DOA) is another good example. Through its conscientious efforts, one significant, substantively discriminatory statute within its enforcement responsibility has been amended to eliminate sex bias, and the Department has proposed corrective legislation for another.^{6/} In addition, the regulations and policies of the Farmers Home Administration (FmHA), which falls under DOA's jurisdiction, have been largely rewritten to remove their adverse impact on women.^{7/} This does not mean that the Task Force's work in this area is finished, however. For these Federal measures to be effective, it is imperative that the regulatory and policy changes be included in the FmHA state supplements (the operating procedural manual governing individual loan processing for each state). The latest information available indicates that most of the state supplements have not been updated to include the changes, and correcting that situation will be one of the principal areas of concern for the Task Force.

^{6/} Section 2014(c) of Title 7, United States Code, permitted an exception for "mothers or members of the household who have the responsibility of care of dependent children . . ." to the general rule that households with an "able-bodied adult" were ineligible for food stamps. Pub. L. No. 95-113 removed this exception by substituting new provisions relating to income standards for eligibility. The other statute in question, 7 U.S.C. § 1923 authorizes preferential treatment for married and dependent families for certain agricultural loan programs and is inconsistent with the Equal Credit Opportunity Act. 15 U.S.C. § 1691 et. seq. Corrective legislation proposed by the Department of Agriculture has not yet been enacted.

On another front, the General Services Administration (GSA) has also taken corrective measures with respect to certain discriminatory features in its rules and regulations. Thus, the failure to include "sex" as a protected class within the nondiscrimination provisions of its posted notices in public buildings has been cured by the agency. Moreover,

^{7/} Virtually all 900 pages of FmHA's regulations, internal directives and forms have been rewritten to remove sex bias. Among the more significant changes are the following: (1) insurance policies must now reflect all owners, not just husbands; (2) an analysis of the industry and initiative of the wife no longer required for farm loans; (3) spouses no longer required to execute deeds of trust, notes and documents of indebtedness unless they are co-applicants/borrowers; (4) wives are no longer individually and separately liable on documents of indebtedness, notes, etc., that are not for their benefit; (5) language referring to the applicant and borrower as the husband has been removed; (6) several statements of nondiscrimination on the basis of sex have been added; and (7) implementing regulations for the Equal Credit Opportunity Act in the loan processing provisions have been finalized.

GSA has agreed to revise some nineteen publications, including the GSA Handbook, that portrayed male employees as supervisors or in leadership positions, while females appear only as secretaries. In the face of a report in 1978 by Public Building Services (PBS) on the Federal Government's lack of attention to female-owned businesses, GSA took the additional initiative to co-sponsor a seminar with the Wharton School on "Women in Business."

The Interstate Commerce Commission has a similar record. Responding to the identification of several minor provisions of the Interstate Commerce Act that contained discriminatory language based on sex,^{8/} the then Acting Chairman of the Commission forwarded to the Speaker of the House of Representatives on April 20, 1981, legislation designed to eliminate these and similar suggestions of sex discrimination; the bill is currently pending before Congress. ICC publications containing sex role-stereotyped illustrations are in the process of being corrected. And in the regulatory and policy area, the rate structure offered by ^{8/} For example, statutory exceptions allowing the issuance of free passes presently extend to, among others, ". . . traveling secretaries of railroad Young Men's Christian Association . . . to linemen of telegraph and telephone companies . . . to newsboys on trains . . . [and to] the families of certain of those listed, 'families' being defined as including 'widows during widowhood.'" (Emphasis added).

a common carrier (interstate limousine service) has been revised to remove sex bias.^{9/}

The Federal Home Loan Bank Board, additionally, has acted on the areas of sex bias identified in its regulations and has favorably resolved all but one.^{10/} Similarly, the Central Intelligence Agency has concentrated its efforts, as it needed to, on increasing the number of women in its professional job categories: up to 20 percent as of 1981.

The essential point is that all agencies of the Federal Government have focused their attention on the legal imperative of striking from their rules, regulations, programs and policies unjustified disparities in treatment based on sex, and they are currently in the process of implementing necessary changes. Such administrative activity is admittedly tedious; rarely does it attract public attention or draw headlines. But, its importance to achieving the fundamental goal of equal opportunity for all, regardless of sex, cannot ^{9/} The ICC has also been advised of its enforcement responsibility under the Equal Credit Opportunity Act with respect to common carriers. The Task Force intends to monitor the agency's development of a regulatory enforcement program to carry out that responsibility so as to ensure the proper sensitivity to women's rights.

^{10/} Exclusion of pregnancy-related disabilities from the disability insurance package remains unresolved, but that is due primarily to the insurance carriers refusal to make any alterations to benefits or coverage under the existing long-term contract.

be overstated. Thus, the monitoring efforts of the Task Force in this area and the continuing review of the Department of Justice, will be most vigilant so that a meaningful and comprehensive conclusion can ultimately be attained.

IV. Other Women's Issues of General Importance

Beyond the removal from Federal laws, rules and regulations of language that unjustifiably discriminates on account of sex, there are a number of broader issues of general importance to women that are receiving attention from this Administration. As to some of these, a gender-neutral solution has been found; for others, further study is needed. Set forth below is but a sampling of some of those issues.

A. This Administration has, for example, taken corrective action in equalizing income levels used to define poverty status for men and women. To understand the significance of the adjustment, some background information is needed.

On the average, women employed full time earn approximately 60 percent of what male full-time employees earn. At least some of this difference in earnings appears to be attributable to educational practices which do not prepare women for employment or which channel them into lower paying occupations. Additionally, women have traditionally assumed primary responsibility for homemaking and child care. These responsibilities interfere with continuous employment and with the ability to maintain and increase earning capacity over an adult life.

Comparing the earnings of full-time workers, however, gives an incomplete picture of the relative economic positions of men and women. A comparison of total income levels is more informative. In 1948, the median income of white females was 45.1 percent of that of white males.^{11/} The median income of non-white males was higher: 54.3 percent of that of white males. The income of non-white females was much lower: only 19.6 percent of that of white males. In 1979, the income of non-white males had increased in relation to that of white males to 65.1 percent, while that of white females had declined to 35.6 percent. Over the same period, the income of non-white females increased to almost the same level as that of white females: 33.2 percent of the income of white males.^{12/}

These income levels include the incomes of both full- and part-time workers in each category. They may, therefore, include some persons who were primarily supported by the incomes of others. Accordingly, it may be more instructive

^{11/} The median income does not include persons, such as full-time homemakers, who had no income.

^{12/} The trend between 1948 and 1979 was not continuous. Income for white females declined between 1948 and 1963, when it reached a low of 29.9 percent, and began to increase at the end of the decade. The income of non-white males reached a low of about 50 percent at about the same time, while that of non-white females fluctuated slightly around 19 percent until about 1962 when it began to increase. The income of non-white males has continued to increase relative to that of white males, but the relative incomes of both white and non-white females have declined in recent years; for white females, it declined from a high of 37.7 percent in 1977. The high for non-white females, 34.4 percent, occurred in 1976.

to look at poverty rates as a measure of relative economic well-being. In 1959, the poverty rate for all persons was 22.4 percent. The poverty rate for persons in families headed by men was 18.7 percent, while for families headed by women the poverty rate was 50.2 percent. By 1978, the poverty rate for persons in male-headed families had declined by almost two-thirds to 6.6 percent. The rate for persons in female-headed families had also declined, but by only about one-third, to 32.3 percent. In addition, although the number of people living in poverty declined from about 39 million in 1959 to 24 million in 1978, the number in families headed by women actually increased from 12 million to almost 13 million. In 1978, more than half (50.3 percent) of all families below the poverty level were headed by women, although female-headed families were only 14.6 percent of all families. And poor families headed by women were poorer than families headed by men: the "income deficit" (difference between the poverty level and actual family income) was $2,190 for female-headed families as compared to $1,664 for male-headed families.^{13/}

^{13/} It should be noted that these figures may understate the number of low-income women and persons in families headed by women as compared to men, because the official poverty level used in 1978 was lower for women than for men. The (non-farm) poverty level for a man living alone was $3,460, while that for a woman was $3,196. A family of four headed by a man was officially "poor" with an income of $6,665, but a family of the same size headed by a woman was not "poor" if its income was above $6,632. The statistical picture is clouded somewhat by the failure to include the value of in-kind transfers when calculating income.

In light of these discrepancies, efforts began several years ago to convince the Office of Federal Statistical Policy and Standards to abandon its continuing use of a sex-based poverty level distinction. It was not until June 1981, however, that the proposal to adopt a sex-neutral definition of the poverty level was approved by the Cabinet Council on Economic Affairs. The Director of the Bureau of the Census has now been instructed by the Administration to use the new definition in reporting data from the 1980 Census. It will also be used in reporting data from the Current Population Surveys beginning with 1981. See 46 Fed. Reg. 62674 (1981). This will undoubtedly work to the advantage of a sizeable number of women who were unfairly assigned a lower economic status, both individually and as heads-of-household, under the prior gender-based statistical regime.

B. Another area where the Administration has been instrumental in bringing about changes of significant benefit to women involves the legislative effort culminating in enactment of the Economic Recovery Tax Act of 1981. That legislation contains several provisions designed to eliminate tax burdens previously imposed solely on women, including amendments to the marriage tax penalty, child and dependent care credits, and the widow's tax. The effect of each of these changes is summarized below.

The Marriage Penalty. Under prior law, the so-called marriage penalty penalized women by cutting into a couple's earnings if both work; a higher income tax was imposed on the income of a two-earner married couple than would have been imposed had each spouse been taxed as a single person. The tax acted as a disincentive to women in the workplace because the penalty increased as a couple's income rose, and as the difference between the amounts earned by each spouse narrowed.

To reduce the discrimination against two-earner married couples, the 1981 Act permits these couples to deduct on their joint returns 10 percent of the first $30,000 of earnings of the lower earning spouse. This deduction will be phased in over two years. A 5 percent deduction, or a maximum of $1,500, will be allowed for taxable years beginning in 1982 and the full 10 percent, or a maximum of $3,000 will be allowed in subsequent taxable years. This deduction will be available regardless of whether a couple itemizes their deduction.

Child and Dependent Care Credit. Child care is a major concern for working women. For women with relatively low salaries, the costs of child care often negate the benefit of working outside the home to improve the family's economic position.

As a result of the 1981 Economic Recovery Tax Act, the nonrefundable credit for child and dependent care expenses necessary for gainful employment will be available on a three-tiered basis in tax years beginning after December 31, 1981. First, taxpayers with adjusted gross income of $10,000 or less will be entitled to a credit equal to 30 percent of employment-related expenses. Then, the credit will be reduced by one percentage point for each $2,000 of adjusted gross income, or fraction thereof, above $10,000. Finally, for taxpayers with adjusted gross income of over $28,000, the credit will remain at the 20 percent level applicable under prior law to all taxpayers.^{14/}

The Widow's tax. In the last five years Congress has taken certain initiatives -- the Tax Reform Act of 1976, the Revenue Amendments of 1978, and most recently the Economic Recovery Tax Act of 1981 -- to reduce the estate tax burden on female surviving spouses. The first two of these were only partially helpful because they were aimed solely at limiting the harsh effects of estate tax provisions on female surviving spouses, not at correcting the legislation or ^{14/} The maximum amount of employment-related expenses to which the credit can be applied is $2,400 if one qualifying child or dependent is involved and $4,800 if more than one is involved. Thus, the maximum credit for one qualifying individual ranges from $720 for taxpayers with income below $10,000 to $480 for taxpayers with income in excess of $28,000. Similarly the maximum credit for two or more qualifying individuals will range from $1,440 to $960. Under the prior law, the maximum amounts of employment-related expenses subject to the 20 percent credit were $2,000 for one qualifying individual and $4,000 for two or more, with maximum credits of $400 and $800 respectively.

addressing the underlying assumption that work in the home is not economically productive. Until the 1981 legislation, women had been expected to work in the home or in the family business as part of their marital contract, without recognition under the tax laws for their role in the economic success of the family unit.

Prior to the industrial revolution, many people viewed work and home as closely interwoven. In most families, both men and women performed economically productive work. As society became more industrialized, however, income producing work was generally conducted outside of the home, and, consequently, work performed in the home gradually lost its recognition as "economically productive."

The presumption that work at home is without economic value became a policy embodied in the tax code. This presumption, coupled with the reality that wives more often than not survived their husbands, gave rise to the term "widow's tax." Its derivation springs from the particularly harsh effect on female surviving spouses of former section 2040(a) of Title 26 of the United States Code. Prior to the Economic Recovery Tax Act, Section 2040(a) required payment of federal estate taxes on the adjusted gross estate of the decedent, including jointly held property, unless the surviving spouse could prove contribution for "full and adequate consideration in money or money's worth." Failure by a spouse to prove contribution "in money or money's worth" resulted in a 100 percent inclusion of the joint property in the decedent's estate for Federal tax purposes.^{15/} If the estate was short on liquid assets, a dismantling of the jointly held property was often required in order to pay the federal estate tax.

The only way to avoid inclusion of jointly held property in the decedent's estate was to prove an economic contribution. The fact that the property was legally held in both parties' names under state law did not control or affect this Federal statutory requirement. Only if the surviving spouse could prove separate income from outside employment, a separate estate, or assets or income accruing separately through inheritance or accumulated prior to marriage, would exclusion of the spouse's interest be permitted. Moreover, in proving contribution, it was necessary to show that the consideration was received in "money or money's worth." That the wife performed vital services in a traditional way -- housekeeping, cooking, and child care -- was not enough.

In response to public pressure from farm women, Congress enacted Section 2040(b) of the Tax Reform Act of 1976, creating ^{15/} A wife often acquired her share of the jointly held property as a gift from her husband. Until recently, however, amended 26 U.S.C. § 2040(a) provided that the total value of jointly held property was includible in the decedent's estate "except such part thereof as may be shown to have originally belonged to such other persons and never to have been received or acquired by the latter from the decedent for less than an adequate and full consideration in money or money's worth." Thus, even a gift from a husband to his wife was not considered "hers" for Federal estate tax purposes.

the so-called "qualified joint interest" in property used in farming or other businesses. While such a joint property interest could be excluded from the decedent's estate notwithstanding Section 2040(a), Section 2040(b) was not understood by many taxpayers and therefore was infrequently used.

In recognition of this fact, Congress enacted Section 2040(c) as part of the Revenue Amendments of 1978. Unfortunately, Section 2040(c), which created an "eligible joint interest" was also of limited use. It applied only to a decedent's spouse who had "materially participated" in a farm or other closely-held family business. The spouse was permitted to "work off" her interest in the jointly held property over a number of years if she materially participated in the family business.

Because neither of these Code provisions provided a meaningful answer, Congress, with Administration support, tried a third time in 1981 to remove the widow's tax from the Code. Passage of the Economic Recovery Tax Act (Pub. L. No. 97-34) successfully eliminated the harsh effect of section 2040(a) on women. By its terms, women who survive their spouses are now considered, for Federal estate tax purposes, owners of half of the jointly held property, regardless of their financial contribution toward its acquisition. Interspousal transfers at time of death pass tax free. Most important, however, is the recognition by Congress through this Act that marriage is, among other things, an economic partnership and that a woman's contributions, including homemaking services and active participation in the family business, are vital to that partnership.

C. A separate issue to be addressed concerns the different treatment accorded to men and women under certain employee pension plans. Because women, as a group, tend to live longer than men, the likelihood is that pensions dependent on sex-based actuarial (life-expectancy) principles generally require women, as compared to men, to make larger individual contributions into a pension fund, while receiving smaller periodic payouts from the fund as retirement benefits.

In 1978, the Supreme Court in Los Angeles Department Water and Power v. Manhart, 435 U.S. 702, held that Title VII of the Civil Rights Act of 1964 prohibits employers from requiring women to make larger contribution payments into a pension fund in which all employees were required to participate. The issue before the Court in Manhart was, however, exceedingly narrow, and the Court so treated it. Thus, no consideration was given on that occasion to the perplexing problem of how the distribution of employee benefits should be determined.

Several lower courts since Manhart have held that all pension plans which differentiate in employee treatment on the basis of sex -- whether measured in terms of contributions or benefits -- are prohibited by Title VII. Still to be finally resolved by the courts, however, are a number of complex issues related to the proper use of actuarial tables in determining pension and annuity benefits, the extent to which "spousal coverage" questions are a proper matter for Title VII consideration, and the appropriate measurement of damages to compensate victims of sex discrimination in this area. These difficult issues obviously have important policy overtones and they are currently receiving careful consideration by this Administration through a separate Presidential Working Group that is studying the ramifications of Manhart and lower court decisions that have followed in its wake.

D. Several concerns have also been raised about the treatment women generally are accorded under the Social Security Act in the area of retirement benefits. The problem can be briefly stated. The Social Security system provides benefits for homemaking spouses of covered workers, but their benefits are less comprehensive than those provided for spouses who work outside the home. No additional benefits are provided for spouses who combine homemaking with paid employment; thus, secondary wage earners get little additional protection from the Social Security taxes they pay. For this reason, and because of certain unintended results of the benefit formula, retirement benefits for couples and their survivors are significantly different depending on how earnings are distributed. In general, one-earner couples receive higher benefits than two-earner couples with the same total earnings. At very low income levels, benefits for one-earner couples may be the same as those for two-earner couples, and some two-earner couples may receive lower benefits than couples where both spouses have equal earnings.

These concerns are but a part of a series of complex issues under the Social Security Act that fall within the review responsibility of the President's Social Security Task Force. They are mentioned here only to identify them as areas targeted for consideration by this Administration as part of its overall effort to remove whatever unfairness exists in the laws based on unjustifiable discrimination on account of sex.

V. Conclusion

This report reveals that considerable progress has been made toward the goal of attaining legal equity for women in the statutes and regulations of the United States Government. Most gender-based barriers have today been eliminated and, with their removal, women in dramatically increasing numbers are taking their rightful place alongside men in all fields of endeavor. This heartening progress does not suggest, however, that we can now rest on recent accomplishments. The fight against sex discrimination is not yet over, and until the laws of this country fully protect the rights of men and women equally, there can be no relaxation of the effort to eradicate the last vestiges of official action grounded in sex-based prejudices. To that end, the monitoring efforts of the Task Force and the research efforts of the Department of Justice will continue to be most vigilant.

SOCIAL SECURITY

Uncorrected Sex Bias in Federal Statutes:

42 U.S.C. §402 - Establishes eligibility requirements for various Social Security benefit categories. It is necessary to compare eligibility requirements for wives and widows with those for husbands and widowers in order to identify provisions which discriminate on the basis of sex.

Subsections 402(b) and (c) establish old-age benefits for wives and husbands, respectively, of individuals entitled to old age or disability benefits. Under Section 402(b), divorced wives, as defined in section 416(d), may be entitled to benefits. There is no provision for benefits for divorced husbands, but benefits are now payable to divorced husbands pursuant to Oliver v. Califano, Civil No. 76-2397 (N.D. Cal. June 24, 1977).

Subsection 402(b) also provides benefits for the wife of a retired or disabled individual who has in her care a dependent child of that individual. There is no corresponding provision for husbands, but benefits have been extended to husbands by regulation as a result of Cooper v. Califano, 81 F.R.D. 57 (E.D. Penn. 1978). See 20 C.F.R. 404.330(c).

Prior to 1977, husbands, but not wives, were required to demonstrate economic dependency on the insured spouse in order to be eligible for benefits. The Supreme Court extended benefits to husbands without regard to dependency in Califano v. Goldfarb, 430 U.S. 199 (1977), and Congress amended the statute to reflect this change in the 1977 Social Security Amendments. Pub. L. No. 95-216, 91 Stat. 1527 (1977).

Subsections 402(e) and (f) establish benefits for widows and widowers respectively. Subsection 402(e) also establishes benefits for surviving divorced wives, but there is no provision for surviving divorced husbands in section 402(f). See 20 C.F.R. 404.336. This distinction was found to be unconstitutional in Vitali v. Harris, 508 F. Supp. 854 (D. Fla. 1981); Baker v. Harris, 503 F. Supp. 863 (D.D.C. 1980); and Ambruse v. Califano, No. 78-608-V (W.D. Wash. Sept. 24, 1979). Benefits are now being paid to surviving divorced husbands on the same basis as surviving divorced wives.

Subsection 402(f) - Cuts off benefits for widowers who remarry before age 60. Widows who remarry before age 60 also lose eligibility, but regain it if the subsequent marriage terminates. This distinction was held to be unconstitutional in Mertz v. Harris, 497 F. Supp. 1134

(S.D. Tex. 1980), and benefits are now paid to widowers who have remarried but are not married at the time of application.

Subsection 402(d) of the Act provides benefits for dependent children of disabled, retired, or deceased workers. Subsection 402(d)(1)(D) provides that these benefits terminate when a child marries, but subsection 402(d)(5) makes an exception for a child over 18 who marries a person who is also entitled to Social Security benefits. A child over 18 is entitled to continue to receive children's benefits if he or she is disabled. Thus, under subsection 402(d)(5), a married child who is disabled can continue to receive benefits if his or her spouse is a disabled worker or is also entitled to benefits as a disabled dependent child. If a husband and wife are each entitled to benefits as disabled children, and the wife recovers from her disability, her benefit will be terminated but her husband's benefit will not be affected. However, if the husband recovers and the wife remains disabled, both of their benefits will be terminated. Similarly, the benefits of a disabled child married to a disabled worker will be terminated when the worker recovers if the child is the wife, but not if the child is the husband. The rationale for this distinction is that a husband is expected to support his wife if he is not disabled, but a wife is not expected to support her husband. See 20 C.F.R. 404.352(b)(2). A challenge to this distinction is pending in Cimaglia v. Harris, No. 78-6353-. (S.D. Fla.).

Subsection 402(g) provides "mothers" benefits for widows and surviving divorced wives who are caring for a dependent child of the decedent. The statute does not provide benefits for similarly situated fathers, but benefits were extended to fathers by the Supreme Court in Weinberger v. Weisenfeld, 420 U.S. 636 (1975), and to surviving divorced fathers by Yates v. Califano, 471 F. Supp. 84 (W.D. Ky. 1979). See 20 C.F.R. 404.339 and 404.340.

42 U.S.C. §403 - Section 403 refers to benefit categories established by section 402, discussed supra.

42 U.S.C. §405 - Refers to benefit categories established by section 402, discussed supra.

42 U.S.C. §411 - Section 411(a)(5) establishes rules for crediting earnings for persons who are self-employed. It provides that in community property states all of the income derived from a trade or business is treated as income of the husband "unless the wife exercises substantially all of the management and control of such trade or business ..." This provision was held to be unconstitutional in Hester v. Harris, 631 F.2d 53 (5th Cir. 1980); Carrasco v. Secretary of Health, Education and Welfare, 628 F.2d 624 (1st Cir. 1980); and Becker v. Harris, 493 F. Supp. 991 (E.D. Calif. 1980). See 20 C.F.R. 404.1086.

42 U.S.C. §413(a) - Defines "quarter of coverage" for purposes of determining insured status. There is a savings provision for people who reached retirement age between Jan. 1, 1955 and July 1, 1957 and had too few quarters of coverage to be eligible because earnings were credited in the quarter in which they were paid instead of when they were earned. Retirement age at that time was 62 for women and 65 for men. Not changed.

42 U.S.C. §416 - Subsection 416(h) establishes rules for determining relationships between potential beneficiaries and insured workers. An illegitimate child would be eligible for benefits based on the earnings record of a natural parent if the child could inherit by intestate succession from the parent under the laws of the State in which the parent is (or was at the time of death) domiciled. Because of the difficulty of establishing paternity, some formal evidence of the relationship may be required for an illegitimate child to inherit from his natural father. Subsection 416(h)(3) therefore establishes rules under which a child will be "deemed" to be the child of an individual for purposes of eligibility for Social Security benefits. Two of these rules are gender specific: an applicant shall be deemed to be the child of an insured individual if he "has been deemed by a court to be the father of the applicant," or if such insured individual is shown by evidence satisfactory to the Secretary to be the father of the applicant and was living with or contributing to the support of the applicant.

In most states, proof of the biological relationship alone is sufficient to enable an illegitimate child to inherit from its mother. Under the Social Security Act, however, proof of the biological relationship will not make an illegitimate child eligible on the basis of his or her father's record unless the father was either living with the child or contributing to his or her support at the relevant time. See 20 C.F.R. 404.355(d).

42 U.S.C. §417 - Section 417 of the Act provides that military service during World War II may be treated as covered employment for the purpose of determining eligibility for and the amount of Social Security benefits, unless the veteran is eligible for another federal pension based, in whole or in part, on that service. Subsection 417(f) provides that the widow of a veteran who is entitled to a military retirement benefit may elect to have the military service treated as covered employment by waiving her right to the military retirement benefit. There is no equivalent provision for widowers of World War II veterans. See 20 C.F.R. 404.1343(b).

42 U.S.C. §422 - Refers to benefit categories established by section 402, discussed supra.

42 U.S.C. §425 - Refers to benefit categories established by section 402, discussed supra.

42 U.S.C. §426 - Refers to benefit categories established by section 402, discussed supra.

42 U.S.C. §427 - Provides benefits for persons who were 72 years old or older in 1969 and who have some covered employment, but not enough to qualify for benefits under the general rules. Benefits are also provided for wives and widows, but not husbands and widowers, of persons who are eligible under this section.

42 U.S.C. §428 - Individuals who were 72 years old or older in 1968 and who have too few quarters of coverage to be eligible for old-age insurance benefits may be eligible for a special benefit. However, if a husband and wife are both eligible for this special benefit, the amount of the wife's benefit is reduced by one-half. See C.F.R. 404.383.
