EXECUTIVE SUMMARY

NEXT STEPS ON LIBYA

The NSC considered the issue of next steps toward Libya at two meetings in December, the first addressed to the broad pattern of Libyan activity threatening to U.S. interests and the second focused more narrowly on the Libyan assassination threat against key U.S. officials within this country and abroad. These meetings were followed by the December 10 announcement calling for the voluntary withdrawal of Americans from Libya and announcing the invalidation of U.S. passports for travel to Libya. At the same time a private demarche was sent to Libya to make it clear that we would consider any Libyan terrorist attack against a U.S. target to be tantamount to an armed attack upon the U.S. and that we would respond accordingly. The demarche also contained a warning against any Libyan interference with the withdrawal of Americans from Libya or impairment of the safety of Americans still in Libya.

On January 21 the NSC was provided with a status report on Libya. Implementation of the steps ordered in NSDD 16 was reported as proceeding well.

The basic decisions before this NSC meeting concern the issue of whether to revalidate and then activate the next steps toward Libya discussed at the first December NSC meeting. These are steps designed to address the broad and long-lasting Libyan threat and not the proximate threat of "hit squads" that was the focus of the second December NSC meeting and of the contingency planning described in NSDD 16.

Now that we have achieved the withdrawal of most Americans from Libya and reduced to a significant degree the prospect of Libyan hostage-taking in reprisal for U.S. action, we are able to move on to consider next steps for dealing with the broader Libyan problem. While it is necessary to revalidate the contingency planning that focuses on the assassination threat in light of changed Libyan and international circumstances, the primary issues to be decided now are whether and when to invoke IEEPA to take the economic measures described as Item 4a (an embargo of imports of Libyan oil) and Item 4b (an embargo of exports to Libya) in NSDD 16 and whether to undertake additional measures toward Libya by choosing among options developed on an interagency basis. In addition, this NSC meeting will provide an opportunity to revalidate the military measures that address the broader Libyan threat and to assess the advisability and appropriate timing of another U.S. naval exercise in the Gulf of Sidra and several other issues.

Discussion of Oil Embargo and Export Embargo

1. Oil Boycott: The argument for implementing an oil boycott by invoking IEEPA as soon as possible is that this is the absolute minimum we can do to increase the pressure on Qadhafi and to underline our seriousness about Libya. A boycott can be fully justified as a long overdue measure in the face of a sustained pattern of Libyan aggression and misbehavior. It would show that we will no longer help finance Libyan terrorism and subversion, eliminating a major source of doubts about the seriousness of U.S. opposition to Qadhafi. While an embargo would have little direct effect on Libya--since it can sell its oil elsewhere--it is a necessary next step in any long-term strategy toward Libya and can help to build the basis for stronger actions in the future.

The principal arguments against imposing an oil boycott are that it would not have an appreciable economic effect in Libya; it could redound to Qadhafi's benefit in the region; and it could legitimize using oil as a political weapon. Moreover, while the boycott will not affect allied economic interests, there will be political costs. Finally it might also be argued that even if a boycott were implemented, it might be a more effective symbol if it were used in response to a specific provocation.

2. Timing the Ban on Exports: The Polish crisis has increased allied concerns about extraterritorial application of unilateral economic sanctions, as well as the possibility that the allies may charge us with the reckless use of economic sanctions for political ends.

Since we can use IEEPA to impose an export ban without enforcing it extraterritorially, however, we should consider implementing it simultaneously with the oil boycott because: (1) The two sanctions together will make the strongest possible political point to Qadhafi and those threatened by him that the U.S. is no longer willing to do business as usual with an international outlaw; (2) Implementing both measures together avoids the potential inconsistency that would arise if we refuse to buy Libyan oil but continue to sell Libya technology, particularly oil-related technology; (3) Negative allied reactions can be sharply curtailed by a U.S. decision not to seek extraterritorial enforcement, and what criticism there is can be absorbed all at once rather than being faced all over again in several months; and (4) We have justification for taking both measures at this time, on the grounds that the Americans have only just gotten out of Libya.

The main argument against implementing a full export ban is that such a ban without extraterritorial enforcement (e.g., transshipment controls) would be little more than an empty gesture. This could make the U.S. look ineffectual and could, thus, increase domestic pressure to impose extraterritorality. Even if we decide to take this further step, there is an argument that we should delay taking it until after we have had the opportunity to assess the Libyan reaction to the oil boycott and also that we should hold it in reserve so we can respond to further Libyan provocations.

Other Issues

- 3. Withdrawal of Remaining U.S. Citizens: It makes little sense to invoke IEEPA exclusively for the purpose of attempting to force withdrawal of the Americans remaining in Libya after mid-February. However, if we impose either an oil boycott or an export ban, we may want to use IEEPA to remove as many Americans as possible and put us on firmer ground if something does happen to those that remain. The argument against doing so is that the few additional withdrawals we might achieve are not worth the costs of using IEEPA in this manner.
- 4. Banning Financial Transactions in Libya: If it is decided to implement either or both economic measures, it may also make sense to include a ban on financial transactions by Americans in Libya, also under IEEPA. While this may force some U.S. companies to abandon their equity holdings or forfeit their performance bonds in Libya and could impose severe economic consequences for them, such a ban would avoid charges that U.S. capital is financing and is financing and facilitating Libyan oil production and development. However, it should be noted that this issue was not discussed on December 8, 1981 and its implications may not have been adequately considered. Hence, we may want to delay such a decision while stressing that actions affecting U.S. company holdings and operations in Libya should be on a voluntary basis.

5. Gulf of Sidra Exercise: We will not have two carriers in the Mediterranean until April at the earliest and perhaps not until June. Nevertheless, given Qadhafi's nervousness and the importance of keeping the pressure on him, there is good reason to seek to schedule an exercise at a reasonably early time. The counterargument to this is that another exercise soon might back Oadhafi into a corner and build sympathy for him in the region, particularly if a military confrontation again results.

Before taking any or all of the above steps, we need a public affairs and Congressional strategy that prepares the ground for the announcement of new measures directed at Libya. The announcement should be formulated so that it reflects a balanced and well-rounded approach, rather than a set of random negative sanctions.

Since the view is widespread that our initial measures against Libya were linked to the assassination-terrorist dimensions of the Libyan threat, the new measures we may take may not be well understood by the public--especially if the assassination threat appears to have receded. As a result, in laying the groundwork for these new measures with the Congress and the public, it will be very important to explain the broader strategic threat that Libya continues to pose.

Implementation of December 10 Steps

On December 10, the President directed that three steps be taken immediately to reduce the threat that Libya poses to U.S. security (Items 1-3 of NSDD 16). These steps have been implemented and there has been good progress in securing the withdrawal of American citizens from Libya. They include:

- 1. Demarche to Libya: A demarche was delivered to the Libyans on December 10 by the Belgian Ambassador, warning against plotting of terrorist actions against U.S. citizens or facilities. The Libyans firmly rejected our accusations. While we are unable to assess the impact of the demarche on Qadhafi, the CIA believes that it along with other actions may have caused Libya to suspend its activities, at least against U.S. personnel. There is no indication, however, that such a suspension is anything more than a tactical maneuver, or that Qadhafi would fail to resume such methods later.
- 2. Request for Withdrawal: The President requested on December 10 that U.S. corporations operating in Libya facilitate the rapid withdrawal of their American employees. Most of the companies have moved rapidly to comply with this request. As of January 21, about 400 U.S. employees/dependents remained in Libya of the approximately 1200 who were there on December 10, and by early February, we expect this number to drop to less than 100. In addition, there were another estimated 300 American citizens in Libya on December 10, primarily U.S. citizen spouses of Libyans and Americans working directly for the Libyan Government (e.g., technicians, professors, etc.) While their numbers have declined since then, we do not know by how much. A small number of workers (perhaps two dozen) who refused to leave are being terminated by their U.S. employers and will work for the Libyan National Oil Company or other Libyan enterprises.
- 3. Invalidation of Travel: Effective December 11, the State Department invalidated U.S. passports for travel to Libya. Most Americans intending to travel to Libya have complied with this order, although some individuals are entering Libya without their passports. A number of special validation requests have been granted, for journalists, spouses, and individuals designated by their companies to coordinate the withdrawal effort.
