NARA DATE

THE SECRETARY OF STATE

WASHINGTON

December 1, 1984

MEMORANDUM FOR:

THE PRESIDENT

FROM:

George P. Shultz GPS

SUBJECT:

Your Meeting with President Seyni Kountche of Niger, December 11, 1984I. THE SETTING

This is the first time that President Kountche has met with the President of the United States. In 1981, President Kountche met with Vice President Bush in Washington, and in May, he met briefly with the Vice President again during the funeral in Conakry of Guinea's President Sekou Toure. President Kountche recognizes that the real importance of the visit to him is the prestige which accrues from the visit itself. This will enhance his status and influence in West Africa, the OAU, the Islamic Conference, and the Non-Aligned Movement. It will also put Colonel Qadhafi, his aggressive neighbor to the north, on notice that we support President Kountche and his efforts to maintain Niger's territorial integrity and independent foreign policy.

Kountche is an experienced statesman and will want to keep the discussion on a level appropriate to two heads of state. We expect President Kountche to inform you that Niger, a major uranium producer, has decided to sign the Non-Proliferation Treaty in response to your August letter and a decade of U.S. demarches. You should warmly welcome Niger's decision to join the NPT as a major contribution to international efforts to prevent the spread of nuclear weapons.

President Kountche's credentials as an influential Islamic African leader who wishes us well make him an ideal interlocutor for a discussion of African leaders' perceptions of their economic and security concerns, and how these leaders view U.S. policies in Africa. President Kountche is widely regarded as a pragmatist more interested in economic development than in empty rhetoric. Niger was severely affected by the great Sahelian drought of 1969-74. Over the past ten years, Niger, under Kountche's no-nonsense approach to development, was able to avoid a recurrence of the widespread starvation and suffering that its people endured a decade ago. Unfortunately, Niger has not been spared from this year's drought and will require significant amounts of donor assistance to prevent widespread famine. Kountche is the head of an organization of West African states that seek to fight the effects of drought, and he will want to present his views on donor drought relief efforts and the prospects for long-term economic development in Africa.

II. THE ISSUES

U.S.-Niger relations are excellent. You should use the occasion of your meeting with President Kountche to reaffirm our support for his pro-West foreign policy, his efforts to develop Niger's economy, and the way he has dealt with threats from Libya. As one of Libya's southern neighbors, Niger is directly in the path of Qadhafi's expansion into sub-Saharan Africa. In addition, Kountche is much concerned with Nigeria's political fragility and the presence of a radical Libyan-influenced regime in neighboring Burkina Faso. Kountche has proven to be a wily and effective opponent of Qadhafi. You will want to exchange views on the Libyan threat to sub-Saharan Africa and measures to contain Qadhafi's influence in neighboring states.

Historically, Niger has looked to France for protection from Libyan aggression. However, France's slow reaction to Libyan aggression in Chad and its disregard for President Habre in negotiating the French-Libyan withdrawal have shaken Niger's confidence in the French. This coupled with the growth of our assistance programs and the convergence of Niger and USG views, have tempted President Kountche to look to the U.S. as an alternative to his great dependence on France. Our interests justify only a limited role in Niger. Hence, we must make certain that President Kountche understands fully that Niger must look primarily to France for protection.

President Kountche's pragmatic approach to development has nearly enabled Niger to feed itself in recent years. This year, however, Niger has been hit by a devastating drought which threatens widespread famine. Providing adequate food aid to Niger's population until the next harvest will present the greatest challenge to President Kountche's leadership since he assumed power a decade ago. Having come to power partially because the previous government proved incapable of dealing with the consequences of drought, Kountche is acutely aware that the survival of his regime may be at stake. We should demonstrate our understanding of the effects of the drought on Niger, in both humanitarian and political terms, and reaffirm our resolve to assist Niger in its time of need. You will be able to cite impressive food aid totals.

Other objectives we have for the visit include: 1) facilitating African understanding and appreciation of our Southern African policies through an exchange of views with a moderate and influential African leader and 2) demonstrating appreciation for Niger's support of US positions in international fora and encouraging President Kountche to continue these efforts. Detailed talking points have been prepared for your use on each of these topics.
