VISIT TO THE NATIONAL INSTITUTES OF HEALTH

Date: July 23, 1987
Location: National Institutes of Health
Bethesda, Maryland
Time: 12:50 p.m.
(1 hour and 55 minutes, portal to portal)
From: Nancy J. Risque

I. Purpose

To focus attention on your Commission on the Human Immunodeficiency Virus Epidemic and on the Federal Government's continuing commitment to progress against AIDS and AIDS-related diseases.

II. Background

You will meet the members of the Commission, visit a laboratory involved in research and development of AIDS-treatment drugs, visit with children in an experimental treatment program, and be briefed with the Commission members on the current progress in the battle against AIDS and AIDS-related diseases.

Commission: On June 24, 1987, you signed an executive order creating the Presidential Commission on the Human Immunodeficiency Virus Epidemic. The Commission is charged with recommending measures that government at all levels should take to protect the public from infection, assist in finding a cure for AIDS, and care for those who already have AIDS.

Broder Laboratory: Dr. Samuel Broder, Associate Director for Clinical Oncology at the National Cancer Institute, heads the laboratory where the first work was done on the use of AZT as a treatment for AIDS. At this time there is no drug that can eradicate the virus in someone who is already infected. However, Dr. Broder's group evaluates drugs that may combat the disease and has had some success with drugs that limit the growth of the number of viruses in people who are already infected. AZT, or Retrovir, which is its trade name, is one of these drugs and is currently being prescribed for nearly half of the victims of AIDS.

Pediatric Ward: The research that led to Retrovir being prescribed for many AIDS patients proved the drug is effective for some adults. Now Dr. Philip Pizzo is working to determine whether Retrovir can combat HIV infection in children and is currently treating 14 children with the drug in an experimental treatment program. They come to NIH biweekly at first, and then monthly once the drug's effect has plateaued. While adults take Retrovir in pill form, the children receive it in liquid form, administered continuously through a semi-permanent catheter. Dr. Pizzo will introduce you to some of these children and their parents.

Briefing: Dr. Anthony S. Fauci, Director of the National Institute of Allergy and Infectious Diseases, will brief you and the members of your Commission on the current state of the science in the fight against AIDS and the current challenges facing doctors and researchers. Dr. Fauci has previously briefed you and the Domestic Policy Council on AIDS.

III. Participants

Secretary Bowen; Dr. James B. Wyngaarden, Director, National Institutes of Health; Dr. Eugene Mayberry, Chairman of the Commission; Dr. Samuel Broder; Dr. Philip Pizzo; Members of the Commission; and approximately 110 invited guests from the National Institutes of Health and the Department of Health and Human Services.
