MEMORANDUM FOR WILLIAM P. CLARK

FROM: PAULA DOBRIANSKY ^{PD}

SUBJECT: Attempted Assassination of the Pope: Unofficial Soviet Paper

At Tab I is the text of an intemperately-worded "unofficial" paper delivered by Soviet Embassy Charge Bessmertnykh to Under Secretary of State Eagleburger. The demarche disclaims any Soviet or Bulgarian responsibility in the attempted assassination of the Pope, alleges that the U.S. is waging a "slandorous campaign" against the Soviet Union and Bulgaria, and further accuses the U.S. of libeling Soviet leaders. The paper reflects a strong reaction to Western speculations that Andropov, as former head of the KGB, must have been intimately involved in the attempted assassination. It concludes with usual Soviet rhetoric by saying that unless this campaign of vilification against Soviet and Bulgarian leadership ceases, the Soviets will feel "free to act accordingly" -- whatever this means.

Under Secretary Eagleburger has already rejected the protest and its allegations as entirely false. In fact, he noted that U.S. official comment on this issue has been restrained. Lastly, the Under Secretary mentioned that the offensive tone and content of the paper could affect U.S. views of the new Soviet leadership's attitudes on our bilateral relations.

I do not believe that any further action on our part is warranted. Denis Blair and Al Myer concur.

An unbridled slanderous campaign is being conducted in the USA against Bulgaria and the Soviet Union alleging their involvement in the assassination attempt on Pope John-Paul II in May 1981.

All this malicious campaign, as is also openly admitted in the American press, is being carried out with the knowledge and encouragement of the US official bodies. It is being directed and coordinated by the American special services.

We reject in a most categorical way this provocative ploy and the attempts to use a blatant lie in order to cast aspersion on the Soviet Union and other socialist countries.

The very suggestion alleging a possible existence in the socialist countries of certain quarters which can have anything to do with terrorist acts, is fundamentally absurd. It runs counter to the policy and ideology of our society.

The government of the United States of America, undoubtedly, knows that neither Bulgaria, nor the Soviet Union are involved in the actions which some people seek to ascribe to them. No one is in possession of any facts at all with regard to this matter, if one is to speak of nothing but facts and not of the concoctions being fabricated. As to facts, they are simply not in existence. And if, nevertheless, heinous allegations regarding the Soviet Union are continuing, it can be viewed in no other way, but as a deliberate line aimed at exacerbating an atmosphere of animosity in the relationship between our countries. The Soviet side, of course, will draw appropriate conclusions therefrom.

Absolutely inadmissible are offensive personal invectives allowed in the USA lately regarding the Soviet leadership. It is perfectly clear that this constitutes a gross contradiction of both the requirements of elementary ethics and the commonly accepted norms of intercourse among states maintaining diplomatic relations with one another.

The Soviet side lodges a resolute protest with the US government in this regard and indignantly declines the insinuations of that sort.

It is well known that, on our part, we, so far, have been exercising restraint in this respect. However, it should be clear that there must be a limit to everything. If, on the US part, no effective measures are taken to cease invectives regarding the Soviet leadership, we will consider ourselves free to act accordingly.

SPOT COMMENTARY: Andropov Addresses Soviet 60th Anniversary Meeting

In his speech this morning, Andropov made public Moscow's offer in the INF talks to reduce Soviet "medium range" missiles in Europe to a number equivalent to the UK and French missile forces. He appeared to tie this offer, however, to an additional agreement on INF aircraft. He reiterated Moscow's threat to deploy an ICBM analogous to the MX and stated that the USSR was already testing a long-range cruise missile which would be deployed if the US proceeded to deploy long-range cruise missiles of its own.

At the same time, he reaffirmed Moscow's commitment to strategic arms limitations and reiterated the Soviet Union's willingness to reduce the level of strategic nuclear delivery vehicles by 25 percent below the SALT II aggregates.

--Andropov's INF missile proposal has previously been made by Soviet negotiators in Geneva. It implies a Soviet willingness to reduce approximately one-third of its SS-20 force opposite Europe in addition to the dismantlement of approximately 250 older SS-4 and SS-5 missiles. The Soviet offer remains contingent, however, on nondeployment of new NATO missiles.

--His announcement of the Soviet cruise missile program is new. It is intended to heighten pressure on West Europeans to break with NATO's INF plans and may be related to previous Soviet threats to place the US in an analogous strategic position if NATO proceeds with INF modernization.

--Andropov's claim that Moscow is willing to reduce strategic delivery vehicles by 25 percent is consistent with Moscow's START offer to reduce 1,800 ICBMs, SLBMs, and heavy bombers from the agreed SALT II level of 2,400.

Domestic Aspects

The domestic portion of Andropov's speech provided few clues about the direction of policy in coming months, and suggested he has yet to formulate a comprehensive plan for attacking economic problems. He refrained from praising Brezhnev, however, perhaps out of a desire to dissociate himself from the policy failures of recent years.

Andropov's remarks on domestic policy focused on the nationality question, as had Brezhnev's speech 10 years ago and as was appropriate for the anniversary of the Soviet Union's formation. Overall, his remarks emphasized the themes of Russian nationalism and political and economic centralization. He emphasized, for example, the need for greater regional specialization. And his statement that the final aim of nationality policy was the "merger" of national cultures and peoples, for example, was a centralizing formulation that has not been used in recent years. However, he seemed to call for increased representation of indigenous nationalities in the party and state institutions of non-Russian republics. He attributed the persistence of parochial tendencies among Soviet nationalities partly to "mistakes we make in our work."

Andropov also made a brief reference to the food program, suggesting that this part of Brezhnev's domestic policy will continue. He stressed the need to improve transportation, reinforcing other indications that improving the performance of this distressed sector will be a top priority.

Chernenko made a brief introductory speech. The prominent role accorded him indicates that he remains a key figure in the leadership, and further indicates that he is exercising responsibility within the Secretariat for ideology.

(The above preliminary assessments are based on the partial text available from TASS and Moscow Radio at time of writing and are not exhaustive.)
