Dear Mr Henkel,

Thank you so much for your nice letter of 30th March. It was no trouble at all to us to receive your small party at Buckingham Palace, and good to know that the visit proved helpful to your planners.

I think you have already had the answer to your question about photography, from Michael Shea.

With all good wishes.

Dear Mr. Broome:

I am responding to your letter of February 8 to Michael K. Deaver requesting that the President include a visit to Burlington's Gilloge when he is in Ireland.

We are only in the preliminary planning stages and, unfortunately, it is too soon for us to identify the specific sites the President will be visiting during his trip. However, I will keep your request in mind as we begin to firm up the details of the trip and will be in contact with you once we have a better idea of the President's itinerary.

Dear Mr. Broome:

I want you to know that your letter of February 8, 1984 to Mr. Deaver has arrived in our office. In his absence I am referring your correspondence regarding the President visiting a United States manufacturing operation while he is in Ireland to Bill Henkel, Director of the Advance office for his consideration. Upon his return I will bring your suggestion to Mr. Deaver's attention.

Thank you for your interest in the President and taking your time to send your thoughts on the trip to Mr. Deaver's attention.

Dear Mr. Deaver:

We at Burlington have come up with an idea which may enhance President Reagan's June trip to Ireland. Let me state at the outset, however, that this suggestion is in no way a public-relations idea for Burlington's benefit.

Burlington's Gilloge textured woven plant in Tipperary is only 20-25 miles from Limerick, where I understand the President will be. It occurred to us that the President visiting a U. S. manufacturing operation -- which was recently built and employs 300 Irish citizens -- could graphically demonstrate the economic and political goodwill between the two countries. Gilloge is one of four plants we have recently built in Ireland to serve the EEC, and with unemployment being what it is in Ireland, this contribution by a U. S. company is of some significance.

I believe your Irish counterparts would be most pleased at this type of exposure, in that it could serve to encourage other U. S. manufacturers to consider the possibility of locating some of their operations in Ireland.

I look forward to hearing your thoughts on this subject matter.

Sincerely yours,

David W. Broome

Dear Congressman Schumer:

Your letter of May 1 to Mr. Deaver has been referred to me.

Unfortunately, the President's schedule has already been mutually agreed upon by the Government of Ireland and The White House. At this time, there are no windows in his itinerary that would afford him the opportunity to visit the National Park.

We very much appreciate your excellent suggestion. If things change and some time does open up for the President while he is in Ireland, a visit to County Donegal will be on the top of the list for an additional event.

Dear Mr. Deaver:

One of my constituents, Mr. Willie Joe Cunningham, suggested that President Reagan might enjoy visiting the County Donegal when he is in Ireland this June.

A new National Park is due to open in Glenveagh, Donegal in early June. Glenveagh National Park was purchased by the Irish Government in 1975 from an Irish-American of Philadelphia, Mr. Henry McIlhenny. The President's presence at the opening of the park would be a perfect reminder of the close relationship between Ireland and the United States -- a relationship, as Prime Minister FitzGerald said, not of treaty but of kinship.

I hope that you will consider including a visit to Glenveagh in the President's plans.

RE: PRESIDENT REAGAN'S VISIT TO EUROPE AND IRELAND

Dear Minister,

Many thanks for your letter of 19th April, regarding the invitation extended to President Reagan to open the National Park at Glenveagh, County Donegal.

Whilst I appreciate that there are many pressures on the President's time and itinerary it does seem a pity that he would not avail of the opportunity to visit Donegal and help show the world that the most northerly part of Ireland is beautiful and peaceful, is in the Republic and in Ulster.

It would appear more than coincidental that the President in visiting Ireland should plan to visit only three of the four historic provinces. This would suggest his visit to the Republic of Ireland is a limited one. Is it Government policy that he should not visit Ulster? Does the Government not want to underline the fact that one third of Ulster is in the Republic? Should the Government not take the opportunity to underline the fact that part of the historic province of Ulster is in the Republic and also that the province has long established positive historical links with the United States.

I feel that the Government should not lose this opportunity to show President Reagan and the world that the north of Ireland and Ulster is not all bombs and bullets; that there is peace and serenity unequalled in Ireland in the most northerly county of Ireland.

We have already pointed out to the White House that the President could visit Glenveagh direct from Ashford Castle, on a rest break, while briefly opening the National Park before returning to Cong. I do not think it would be organisationally difficult to include this in his itinerary. It is also possible that some of his party could indulge in deer hunting while he could do some fishing on Glenveagh Lough, which is considered by some the finest fishing lake in Ireland.

Cont/....

I have no doubt that President Reagan would receive a warm and memorable welcome in Donegal that would more than justify his decision to visit us and open the National Park at Glenveigh.

With best wishes.

Yours sincerely,

Dermot A. Walsh.

RE: PRESIDENT REAGAN'S VISIT TO IRELAND '84

Dear Mr. Ambassador,

I enclose copy letter of mine to the Minister for Foreign Affairs.

The central question at issue now we feel is that the President is visiting only three of the country's four provinces notwithstanding the fact that one third of Ulster is in the Republic. This would suggest that his visit to the Republic of Ireland is a limited one.

I am sure that there is still time for him to accept the invitation to open the National Park at Glenveagh, County Donegal. We earnestly hope that he will do so. One thing he can be assured of in Donegal is that he will get a great and historic welcome if he does visit us.

Looking forward to hearing from you.

With best wishes.

DERRY PEOPLE DONEGAL NEWS

SATURDAY, 28th. APRIL, 1984

Reagan's welcome

IT IS RIGHT that the Irish people should give a cordial welcome to Mr. Ronald Reagan, as a person and as a holder of that high office, President of the United States of America, the motherland of the Republican ideal.

After all the democratically elected government of the Irish people invited President Reagan. Some critics have pointed out that it is a Presidential election year in the U.S.A. and they believe that Reagan will simply use the visit to win Irish-American votes.

Perhaps that is true, perhaps the Irish-Americans will make up their own mind about Mr. Reagan and how his policies have affected them. Anyway, the Irish hardly invited President Reagan out of sheer disinterested generosity. President Reagan may get votes out of it but Bord Failte is making a big drive in the American tourism market and likewise the occasion will not hurt the Industrial Development Agency trying to get American firms to set up factories here.

It would be unfortunate if the orchestra of minority groups opposed to American policies were to disrupt the occasion as a visit and to turn it into something quite different, a political rally for or against American policies in the Carribbean or elsewhere.

Those who will turn out to welcome the American President will not necessarily be supporters of all his policies or necessarily believe that he is the best man to be President of the U.S.A. But if these groups, some linked to Communist countries, were to make an impact on the visit, its significance could be greatly distorted by implying that the participants were dividing on lines for or against American policies.

It is good for this country that people should be seen to be taking an interest in the affairs of the world at large, that we should be concerned about the suffering of central American people and those in the Lebanon. However, a lot of this work of conscience is directed against America and little of it against the Soviets and their allies.

The whole temper of European anti-Americanism is ambiguous. It depends upon a pathetic faith that Americans can change the world by disinterested, diplomatic and economic action which European countries themselves are incapable of in world affairs. Furthermore, it depends upon the openness and equalitarianism of American society. There are no criticisms to be made of American policies by Irish critics or those in other European countries which have not been made more forcibly by Americans themselves.

A good deal of the disrespect Europeans feel for Reagan is based on the fact that he is a successful man from humble origins, who "made it" as an actor-cowboy. It is amazing that Europeans despite all the revolutions and democratisation, still treat politicians as people to be looked up to and deferred to. In the United States, everyone who voted for Reagan might think himself or herself a better person. America may be a land of vast disparities of wealth but politically it is still a far more democratic society than any other country in the world and that democracy produces ordinary men as leaders while Europe still looks for Great Men, the Super leader and the cult figures of the Right or the Left.

The Matthew T. Mellon Building

The Ulster-American Folk Park tells in a new way how Ulster emigrants lived here and in the New World. It commenced in 1968 with the restoration by the Mellon family of Pittsburgh of the farmhouse home from which their famous ancestor Thomas emigrated with his parents in 1818 as a boy of six.

The Mellon Homestead

In the autobiography which he wrote nearly seventy years later, Thomas describes the surroundings in which he lived in County Tyrone and in the New World and, based on this, other buildings were erected to recreate the scene as Thomas and other Ulster emigrants would have known it. These included the original school for the district and a forge; also a log cabin of the type the Mellon family lived in when, after landing in America they crossed the Appalachian mountains in a Conestoga wagon and settled on a remote farm in Western Pennsylvania. Included in the exhibits at the Park is a Conestoga wagon which dates back to the time the Mellons crossed the Appalachians; also a reconstruction of the larger log house and barn Thomas helped to build as the farm began to prosper.

The Mellons represented what is referred to in American history books as the Scotch-Irish wave of emigration (so called because many of their forebears had emigrated from Scotland to Ulster a few generations earlier). They settled on the farms or as pioneers along the ever expanding frontier of America.

Hughes' Cottage

By contrast the second wave of emigrants which reached its peak in the mid-19th century and came from all over Ireland settled in the fast-growing cities or helped to build the canals and railroads. They are known in the United States as Irish-Americans and are represented at the Folk Park by the boyhood home of Archbishop John Hughes who was born only twenty miles from the Folk Park. As a young man he emigrated with his family to America where he entered the Priesthood. He rose to eminence as Archbishop of New York and founder of St. Patrick's Cathedral on Fifth Avenue, New York.

The story of both migrations and of the part they played in birth and growth of the United States are told in an exhibition and slide and tape presentation in the Matthew T. Mellon Reception and Information Centre. There is also a gifts and crafts shop in the Centre and in a nearby building a cafe is located.

Dear General Saulnier:

It was a pleasure meeting with you today as we begin our mutual preparations for the celebration of the 40th Anniversary of D-Day. The discussions were productive, candid and extremely useful to us as we plan for President Reagan's participation in the events of June 6th.

Please do not hesitate to contact me if I can be of assistance to you in your planning. I look forward to continuing the fruitful dialogue which we have begun today.

Sincerely,

William Henkel
Deputy Assistant
to the President

Dear Mr. Mason:

On behalf of myself and the other members of the pre-advance team for President Reagan's visit to the 1984 Economic Summit, I wish to express my appreciation for your assistance and cooperation during our recent visit in London.

The visit at the National Portrait Gallery was extremely helpful for our planning purposes. I have no doubt that, given the excellent preparations you have made, the Economic Summit will be most successful.

Sincerely,

William Henkel
Deputy Assistant to the President
