Ex-Assemblyman hits the 'big time' on county board

By REED McCLURE
Daily News Staff Writer

More than 12 months have passed since Michael D. Antonovich defeated two-termier Baxter Ward as Los Angeles County supervisor for the sprawling 5th District.

Yet Antonovich still describes his job in terms one normally would associate with a challenger, rather than an incumbent who shares the reins of power with four other members of the Board of Supervisors.

Antonovich is no stranger to government. He was a member of the state Assembly. He sought the Republican nomination for lieutenant governor in 1973, but was defeated by Michael Curb.

That experience, it would seem, should have prepared Antonovich for a new job that in many instances involves carrying out state mandates in health, welfare and administration of the justice system.

But Antonovich, 41, a former schoolteacher, said the transition from state government to county government was the equivalent of passing from kindergarten to medical school.

"The responsibilities and the demands are much greater on the Board of Supervisors level on the individual. I found the bureaucracy easier to deal with on the state level," Antonovich said recently, in an interview after nearly a year in office.

His district covers Glendale, Burbank, the Santa Clara Valley, the Los Angeles area and most of the San Fernando Valley.

County officials, he said, have "a lot of resistance to change that runs counter to things as they have been in the past."

"On the county level," Antonovich said, "I find a great deal of frustration in dealing with the bureaucracy ... as if the bureaucracy runs on its own agenda instead of following the policy of the board."

When asked why this is so, Antonovich cited the growth of the county and the expectations of officials who are accustomed to getting what they wanted without having their programs

MICHAEL D. ANTONOVICH

Antonovich cited a cockroach infestation in Tujunga this summer as an example of his frustration with county officialdom.

Neighbors, he said, "complained that a residence which was dilapidated had approximately one million cockroaches, which was a serious health problem. The response by the bureaucracy was, 'We'll wait 30 days, and we'll get out there and we will condemn it.'"

The supervisor said the taxpayers "are paying for a health department to respond to emergencies. When cockroaches began to infest the neighborhood and nothing was being done, there was a great outcry."

The board, on a motion by Antonovich, asked Chief Administrative Officer Terry L. Hufford to investigate the matter and to make recommendations on how to avoid similar problems. Antonovich added that the board "wanted the people who were responsible to be reprimanded. This was a major foul-up affecting the health of the community."

A report was made, but Antonovich charged that its theme was "business as usual, as if the board was not serious in wanting to know where the foul-up was."

Eventually, Antonovich said, the supervisors changed county procedures so health officials "would be able to respond effectively the next time."

(Hufford blamed the foul-up of Los Angeles.)

The criticism of county officials by Antonovich as well as warnings by chairman/elect Schabarum has led to speculation that there may be some shake-ups within at least a few of the more than 50 county departments. On this score, Antonovich said:

"I would say that the department heads must perform as they would in the private sector -- that the county is no haven for incompetency. This should be true from the department head all the way down to the lowest person on the employment roll."

The county, he continued, must make greater use of contracting and civil service reforms to cut the cost of government and to reduce the size of the county's payroll.

"Due to the liberal dominance on the previous board," Antonovich said, "those two reforms were never truly implemented."

But he noted that the supervisors this year approved changes in personnel rules that took away many of the Civil Service Commission's policymaking powers. He added that "the issue within the next two or three years is not, 'Are we going to contract, as it was with the previous board, but what we are going to contract?' We are going to contract. It will be on competitive bidding, which I think is going to reduce some of the cost and in turn improve the quality of service."

When asked what he thinks he has accomplished, Antonovich takes pride in his role as the chief sponsor on the county's new one-stop Land Development Coordinating Center. Reeling off figures showing how the cost of permit delays can increase housing costs, Antonovich said: "I feel the one-stop permit center has helped reduce red tape."

He praised the conservative majority for pushing through cutbacks in county employment after the Legislature "slashed anticipated state aid. "I feel reducing the employment factor should cut back on a lot of spending ... Let's face it -- we

Dear Mr. Deaver,

To keep abreast of the international economic-political situation we have made a fact finding tour through East Asia from which countries we have recently returned. Although a book may be written on the rather interesting journey, which included China, summarizing we could say that it was quite enlightening.

Enclosed please find four copies of a picture commemorating an historic event which took place in San Francisco about six years ago. Citizen Reagan shaking hands with Mr. Musa Hitam, then Minister of Trade & Industry of Malaysia. Standing to the left is Mr. S. Subramaniam, a director of the Malaysian Industrial Development Authority.

While President Reagan has gained the most prestigious post in the world, Musa Hitam has recently been elevated to Deputy Prime Minister in anticipation of becoming the next Prime Minister of Malaysia when Dr. Mahatir retires. Would you be kind enough to ask President Reagan to sign three pictures and have them returned to us for reforwarding to the Hon. Musa Hitam and his staff.

Thank you very much, indeed.

Very sincerely yours,

Dear Bruce:

It was good to hear from you and I appreciate your kind supportive comments. I am actually looking forward to starting another phase of my life when I leave the White House.

We all enjoyed seeing Helen, Pat and her mother when they were back here. I'm sure they had a marvelous time.

I told Mrs. Reagan of your remarks about your older son meeting her and she was quite touched.

Thanks again for writing. It was nice visiting with you by letter.

Mike,

I read in the paper where you're planning on leaving the White House this year. I hope you have a change of mind. You're the President's most trusted & loyal friend & advisor. You were with him when he launched his political career & it would be great if you stayed with him all the way through.

He's doing such a terrific job & I feel you're a major reason for his success.

- OVER -

For a number of years now I meant to tell you something Med
Hutchinson said to me just before the Brown-Florescu gubernatorial election, during one of our tennis dates. I asked him what he was going to do when Governor Reagan left office. He said he didn't know but that he wouldn't stay at the Capitol. I asked him if he wouldn't work for Mr. Florescu should he become governor & he said "Not after working for this man (Reagan).
after working for the best, I have no desire to work for anyone else."

That's loyalty! I know all of you felt & still feel the same way.

Helen & Pat had a great time visiting you & the President.

I'm still a junior high counselor. I've written a couple of pamphlets for the school district on physical fitness but they probably filed it away. No luck.

Last August I was back home in Santa Barbara & before I left Helen Burndt told me you were at the Biltmore & to look you up.

I was by there & thought about getting you out on the tennis courts but figured you were too busy. Next time, bring your racket. You & I both know the real reason you might leave the White House is because you need to practice your tennis so you can return one of my serves someday.

I also want to tell you what a bum rap Mrs. Reagan is receiving from the press. I remember a party at the Reagans' house when he was governor, Kay & I brought our older son Alex when he was only about one or two. The press went there to take pictures or write articles, so there was no publicity involved.

She went out of her way to pick him up & hold him. She also gave him a kiss on the cheek. When we left, she was on the phone but she took time to wave & say goodbye to us. She is a class lady & I'd like to punch some of her critics right in the nose.

Here's hoping you stay at the White House as long as the President. Keep up the great work & I hope to see you when you're out this way.

Sincerely,
Bruce

Dear Mr. Deaver:

The Subcommittee on Economic Stabilization plans, as its first oversight activity in 1982, to examine the issue of productivity and the national economy. We expect to explore in particular the role of the Federal Government in helping to stimulate increased productivity in the private sector. To begin the hearings, we would like to hear from you, as Chairman of the National Productivity Advisory Committee, on Wednesday, January 27, 1982. We would like you to inform the Subcommittee about the Advisory Committee and its functions and to give us your expectations regarding its contribution to increased productivity and national economic growth.

The Subcommittee on Economic Stabilization, as you may know, initiated the legislation which resulted in the establishment several years ago of the Center for Productivity and the Quality of Working Life. Federal productivity efforts have thus long been a concern of the Subcommittee Members and a subject of extensive legislative and oversight activity. We are particularly eager to hear your testimony on the efforts of the Administration in this important economic area.
