TO: CHARLES WICK, Director
International Communication Agency

FROM: MICHAEL K. DEEVER

Sorry that we're not able to comply completely with your request for Lorena Nidorf to buy 24 sets of pens. They cannot be sold. We were able to get the last 6, and apparently they will not be reordered, since they were fundraising items.

Dear Mike,

Our good Reagan family friend and supporter, Lorena Nidorf, asked if she could buy 24 of the very chic black pens autographed by Ronald Reagan and bearing the seal. I think she got them sometime in the past at a fund-raising dinner. Do you think this would be possible?

Best personal regards.

Dear Marcia:

We all enjoyed your nice newsy letter.

I'm sorry your plans to move to Tahoe didn't work out, but as you observed, it's probably the best thing. Sounds like your life is going to be busy and filled with new adventure.

You may change your mind before you are really ready to go to Greece, however, I've enclosed a pamphlet about Federal overseas jobs. You can also write to the Foreign Officer Recruitment Branch, Box 9317, Rosslyn Station, Arlington, Virginia 22209 or contact Miss Turtle, American Embassy, APO New York 09253.

Yes, we're looking forward to being out of the White House, but it's going to be difficult to give up this life we've been exposed to. It would be ideal if you could just take it in shorter shots.

Thanks again for the nice letter. Carolyn and the children send their love.

Sincerely,

MICHAEL K. DEEVER

Dear Mr. President:

THE WHITE HOUSE

May 18, 1982

On this day President Ronald W. Reagan and Secretary of the Interior James G. Watt announced the founding of the Statue of Liberty-Ellis Island Centennial Commission. Also present at the announcement was Lee A. Iacocca, newly appointed Chairman of the Commission.

The purpose of the Commission shall be:

- To restore and preserve the Statue of Liberty and the Ellis Island facility
- To create a lasting memorial to the brave people who came here from other lands to help build a great nation
- To plan the Centennial events which will help celebrate the historic occasion
- To assist in developing special programs to ensure the future of these historically significant sites.

The Statue of Liberty and Ellis Island have been a symbol of the spirit and meaning of liberty and democracy for the entire world for nearly one hundred years.

The Statue was conceived as a unifying point for the French people, who raised the initial money for the Statue, and presented her to the people of the United States of America on July 4, 1884. Americans then raised the funds required for her installation and she was dedicated by President Grover Cleveland on October 28, 1886.

Ellis Island was opened on January 1, 1892 and during the next 62 years over 17 million people entered the United States through the Island. Today nearly one-half of all Americans can trace their ancestry to family members whose first steps in America were onto the island.

Today, both the Statue of Liberty and Ellis Island are in a serious state of deterioration.

Once again, Americans will be asked to answer the challenge to preserve and protect these treasured symbols of American freedom.

Presented here as a memento of this historic day is a poster reproduction of the Statue of Liberty, one of six versions painted by Peter Max, one of America's foremost artists.

The six original paintings, from which the posters were reproduced, were painted on the South Lawn of the White House on July 4, 1981. They are currently on view at the Knoxville World's Fair. Three of these have been sent to The White House especially for today's ceremonies.

Dear Mr. Davidson:

Thank you for your letter. I appreciate the interest which prompted you to write.

As you know, this Administration shares the concern of your organization to provide tax relief for the beleaguered American worker. One element of the President's efforts in this area was his endorsement of a Constitutional amendment to place limitations on the power of Congress to tax and to spend.

Amending our nation's fundamental law is not a task to be lightly undertaken. It was good of you to give me the benefit of your thoughts on the Administration's position. You can be sure that I will keep them in mind during discussions on a future amendment to require a balanced budget.

With best wishes,

Sincerely,

Dear Mr. Deaver:

We are pleased to have the Administration's support for the Balanced Budget-Tax Limitation Amendment.

However, there was one sentence in Budget Director David Stockman's May 19 testimony before the House Judiciary Committee that greatly disturbed us. He said, "The Administration would, therefore, encourage the Congress to amend H.J. Res. 350 to allow a broader range of events -- unforeseen events posing an imminent threat to national security -- to qualify for a waiver."

We are unalterably opposed to such a weakening of H.J. Res. 350. And make no mistake about it, the proposed change would weaken H.J. Res. 350 to the point of making it useless.

The proposal is designed to solve a non-problem. The amendment already provides for situations that may threaten our nation's security, short of war. First, as Mr. Stockman ably pointed out during his testimony, there should be a contingency fund in the budget. Part of the contingency fund could be used for an unforeseen threat.

Second, other programs could be cut, and the funds could be redirected to meet the threat.

Third, the amendment allows for more spending when new taxes are authorized or when a specific deficit is approved.

Any language you draft to provide for waiving the amendment would be necessarily vague, and an open invitation to future Congresses to subvert the amendment. Defining threats to our nation's security in a constitutional amendment that should qualify for a waiver, but which would not be abused, is impossible.

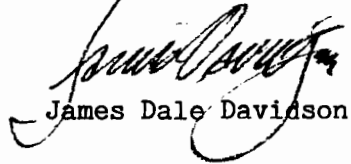

A complete waiver of the amendment for defense spending to protect the nation would also allow uncontrolled increases in spending for programs unrelated to our national defense.

Drafting a partial waiver so that it applies only for defense spending has severe problems too. It could allow the entire defense budget to be placed off the budget, leaving no yardstick for citizens to judge how well other federal spending was being controlled. A waiver for defense spending would make the amendment complex and hamper the public's ability to monitor congressional compliance. Because it would unfairly subject defense spending to less scrutiny, the amendment would lose political support.

Another danger would come from congressional attempts to redefine essential national security programs. This problem is analogous to the capital budget. As Mr. Stockman clearly pointed out during his testimony, the definition of what could qualify as capital expenditure is vague. The definition of defense spending is equally vague.

I hope that the Administration will reconsider its position on the proposed waiver.

Sincerely,

James Dale Davidson

Dear Paul:

Warm thanks for sending me news of your recent speech efforts. The facts of Soviet expansionism and the threat we face is a theme which needs reiteration both at home and abroad. I am glad you are doing it so tirelessly in Canada, as is Bill Clark, with whom I shared your welcome enclosures. Keep up the good work.

Sincerely,

Dear Sir, Dear Mrs Deater

Ever since we received this four bottles of very fine California wine (Silverwood Cellars - Chardonnay 1979 - Jordan 1976) you send us through Ambassador de Cabonlaye, Jacquelin and I have wanted to return this most graceful gesture.

As I told you before your departure for Versailles, it just happens that your new neighbors, Helie and Nadege de Noailles are old and dear friends of ours, and brought from France in their remembrance, some wine we had kept in our cellar back there.

So please now, enjoy the pleasure of the Deville la Cuvée 1966 - Gloria St-Jubein 1973 and Roederer Champagne 'Cuvée' and brut 1975, the latter being Jacquelin's family champagne estate.

With again all our thanks,

Jean and Jacqueline de Ponten d'Amécourt
