MEMORANDUM FOR:

MICHAEL K. DEAVER .

FROM:

JOHN F. W. ROGERS ASSISTANT TO THE PRESIDENT FOR MANAGEMENT AND ADMINISTRATION

SUBJECT:

FORMER PRESIDENTS

This memorandum replies to your request for information concerning monies and services available to former Presidents. It is based chiefly on the The Former Presidents Act of 1958, as amended, Pub. L. 85-745 (72 Stat. 838).

Pension

Former Presidents receive an annual retirement allowance equalling that paid to officials at Level I of the Executive Schedule (currently $86,200). This pension is not available, however, for any period during which a former President holds an appointive or elective office or position in the Federal Government or the government of the District of Columbia to which is attached other than a nominal rate of pay. (Pub. L. 91-658; 84 Stat. 1963; January 8, 1971).

Staff Allowance

$150,000 per annum for the first 30 months (91 Stat. 1170) is available to pay the staff of a former President. Thereafter, the amount drops to $96,000 per year for aggregate staff salaries. No individual staff person may be paid in excess of Level II of the Executive Schedule. As of January 6, 1985 this is $75,100. The Administrator, GSA provides funding for staff, which is chosen by the former President. The Act does not authorize detailing Federal employees to assist a former President.

Office Space

The Administrator of GSA provides suitable office space, appropriately furnished and equipped, as determined by the Administrator (in consultation with the former President), at such a place within the U.S. as the former President shall specify. (Pub. L. 85-745)

Free Mailing Privileges (Franking Privileges)

A former President may send non-political mail within the U.S. and its territories and possessions as franked mail. (Pub. L. 93-191; 87 Stat. 742; December 18, 1973).

Secret Service Protection

Unless declined, protection for former Presidents and their spouses continues during their lifetimes. It is also provided to a surviving spouse until remarriage and to the minor children of former Presidents until the age of 16 (82 Stat. 1198).

Travel Expenses

Travel expenses for former Presidents and their staffs are included in GSA's annual travel budget. Historically, the amount allocated to former Presidents and their staffs has not been completely utilized. It has become custom that host organizations pay travel and expenses for former Presidents. Personal travel, of course, is paid for by the former President himself.

In addition, the fiscal year 1969 supplemental appropriation act stated that a former President and no more than two members of his staff would be authorized to use Former Presidents Act funds (included in the GSA travel budget) for official travel expenses. GSA has interpreted the statute to mean that no more than two staff members may travel with a former President at any one time. There is little written guidance in this area, but it appears settled that neither the President nor his staff is limited to the normal government per diem.

Health Care

By the authority of 5 U.S.C. § 301, the Office of the Secretary of Defense sent a memorandum, dated May 23, 1968, to the Secretaries of the military departments requesting that they issue a standing designation that all former Presidents, their wives, widows, and minor children be eligible for health care in the medical facilities under their charge. This directive remains in effect.

The Presidential Transition Act of 1963 w/ amendments Pub. L. 88-277

The Administrator of the General Services Administration is authorized to provide, upon request, to each former President & Vice President, for a period not to exceed six months from date of expiration of term, necessary services and facilities of the same general character given to the Presidentelect & Vice President-elect, for use in winding up the affairs of the office. The President includes in the budget transmitted to Congress for each fiscal year in which his regular term of office will expire a proposed appropriation for carrying out the purpose of this Act. This appropriation is not to exceed $1,000,000 for a former President and Vice President and $2,000,000 for the President-elect and Vice President-elect.

Please let me know if you need any additional information.

Reasan nominated for Nobel Peace prize OSLO, Norway (UPI) _ President Reasan was nominated for the 1985 Nobel Peace Prize _ only hours before the deadline for nominations, news reports said Friday.

Reasan's nomination was in one of three letters received by Jacob Sverdrup, standing secretary of the Norwegian Nobel Committee, hours before the deadline, the Norwegian daily Verdens Gang said.

It said Reasan was nominated along with an Israeli minister in the hastily delivered letters from an American professor, a member of the Israeli parliament and a Norwesian University professor.

Under the secret selection procedures of the Nobel Institute, committee members are prohibited from revealing details of nominations. Only past winners, some academicians and parliamentarians may make nominations.

Because of a carso mixur, three envelopes _ one of which contained Reasan's nomination _ were sent to Stockholm instead of the Nobel Institute in Oslo, which selects the coveted peace prize.

After a desperate search, the mistake was discovered by the courier's London office and the nominations were rushed to the Norwesian carital where customs officials said they worked overtime to clear the letters before the midnight Jan. 31 deadline.

The envelopes were hand-delivered to Svendrup's doorstep about four hours before the stroke of midnisht, Verdens Gens said.

The newspaper Verdens Gans reported that Reason was nominated by an American philosophy professor, a member of the Israeli parliament, and a Norwesian university employee. It did not sive their names.

Lange is currently in conflict with the Reagan administration over his refusal to allow visits to New Zealand ports by nuclear-powered ships or ships equipped with nuclear weapons. The newspaper did not say who nominated Lange.

The paper said five members of the Norwegian Storting, or parliament, nominated the World Organization of the Scouts Movements and the World Association of Girl Guides and Girl Youts in observance of the United Nations' Year for Youth.

Friday was the deadline for this year's nominations. The selection by the Norwesian Farliament's Nobel Connittee takes place in October. Following its usual practice, the Walt Disney Productions, reversing an earlier decision, said yesterday it will let the world-famous Rockettes perform in its summer shows at Radio City Music Hall in Manhattan.

The company, which had planned to kick the Rockettes out of the music hall for 10 weeks, agreed to allow the 36 regular dancers to appear in the New York revue while 18 new dancers take part in a patriotic performance at Epcot Center in Orlando, Fla.

"We wanted them to appear at Walt Disney World in Florida and we understood their desire to appear in the New York show, so we worked it out so they could do both," said Walt Disney World representative Charles Ridgway, who was in New York to introduce Mickey Mouse and Donald Duck to their new co-stars.

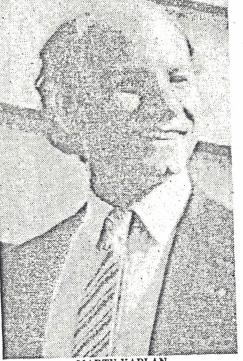

He would not say why company officials changed their minds. Disney first rejected the high-kicking Rockettes as "inappropriate" in a show featuring Donald Duck and lickey Mouse.

The decision settled a dispute in which the dancers picketed the music hall daily since learning three weeks ago they would be excluded from the hall starting June 21. Disney plans to premiere two movies during its summer show.

The Rockettes have not missed a show at the New York landmark since they began performing there in 1932.

From Mondale to Mickey Mouse

Joining Walt Disney will be none other than Marty Kaplan, Walter Mondale's former deputy campaign manager for policy and speech writing. Kaplan, who will soon be house-hunting in Los Angeles, will be a production executive at Disney Studios. "I'm doing it for the tan," he said yesterday. "If you had to pick the one town in the country that is most like Washington, it might be L.A. It's a company town. You can go to a restaurant and you'll know who everybody is, and you can tell from whom they're sitting with what they're trying to get."

End Notes

President Reagan has been nominated for the 1985 Nobel Peace Prize, the Norwegian daily Verdens Gang reported yesterday. Because of a mail cargo mixup between Stockholm and Oslo, Reagan's nomination was received by Jacob Sverdrup, standing secretary of the Norwegian Nobel-Committee, just four hours before the deadline, the paper said. . .

Howard Weitzman, now Cathy Evelyn Smith's defense attorney, said he might advise her to seek a jury trial on murder and drug charges in connection with the death of comedian John Belushi. Smith was freed on bail yesterday after a judge gave Weitzman a Feb. 11 deadline to decide whether she will accept a bargained plea...

Barber Conable, the ranking Republican on the House Ways and Means Committee who retired last year, will write a periodic column for U.S. News & World Report. His first, scheduled for the Feb. 11 issue, will tackle the budget process. He joins another contributing columnist, David Gergen, former White House chief of communications under President Reagan. Gergen started his column Jan. 14...

John Z. DeLorean and Cristina Ferrare, in the midst of a divorce, have agreed to each hold temporary custody of one of their two children, DeLorean's lawyer said yesterday. MEMORANDUM	FOR	MICHAEL	Κ.	DEAVI	ER	•
FROM:		JAMES S.
SUBJECT:	and the second	FOREIGN	TRA	AVEL 1	FOR	MRS.	REAGAN

You asked for further information on foreign travel for Mrs. Reagan.

We plan to depart Bonn on Friday, May 3 and travel to Rome to have an audience with the Pope on subject of drug abuse. Our visit would also include lunch with Petrini and a visit to an Italian drug program where Mrs. Reagan would bestow graduation certificates. We would overnight with the Rabbs and return to Bonn on the 4th. I have discussions underway with both Max and Bill and will travel to Rome to work out the details at the end of the March pre-advance.

Mexico is a probable location for a Fall 1985 trip and Canada will be early 1986. Beyond this we will have to see what kind of invitations come in. MEMORANDUM

Mrs. Sheila Tate, Press Secretary, Office of the First Lady, The White House

Dear Mrs. Tate,

In planning for The Times' photo coverage of the Inaugural and related events, I am keenly aware that this is also a very special, personal time for the Reagans.

Considering that, would it be possible to share a little of that personal moment, conveying the quiet time amidst the public events by allowing me to photograph the Reagans together in the residence Sunday or Monday, January 20 or 21?

Since second Inaugurals come but once in a lifetime, I can't emphasize the historic importance such a picture would have--you and the Reagans know that. I would work unobtrusively and would not need to take a lot of time. But a candid, unposed glimpse of the Reagans alone at this time would put a real, human touch to our Inaugural coverage.

I do hope this request meets your approval; I'm sure such a picture would be well received across the country.

Sincerely, C

Paul Hosefros

Sheila -

This is a copy of my letter to Mike Deaver, which we discussed by phone. (His announced "retirement" makes no difference to our invitation.)

I have attached a letter to you updating the information in the letter to Deaver.

Mr. Michael K. Deaver Deputy Chief of Staff The White House Washington, D.C. 20500

Dear Mr. Deaver:

On Sunday, January 20, NBC News is planning a special edition of MEET THE PRESS, airing from 12:00-1:00 PM EST.

We hope to present a number of elements, including live coverage of White House activities if they are available, live interviews and pertinent taped pieces.

We would like very much to include a live interview with you in the program. If necessary, we could do it from the White House. I know you usually don't appear on such programs, but since this will be a special format and we will vary the length and type of interviews, I hope you will give our invitation consideration. If you are interested, I'm sure we can work out mutually satisfactory details later when information is made public about the White House events of that day.

It would be a special pleasure to have you with us on this program.

Sincerely,

NBC News

Betty Cole Dukert Producer, Meet the Press

January 3, 1985

Dear Sheila:

Since my letter to Mike Deaver, we have a somewhat clearer idea of the format for our January 20, Special Edition of "Meet the Press". I gave you the general outline by telephone, but I'll repeat it here for your convenience. (I have also updated Mr. Deaver's office and the White House press office.)

The focus generally will be the Second Reagan Administration - the next four years. We will have one primary live interview (15-20 minutes), for which we have extended an invitation to Jim Baker. There will be two shorter ones with Congressional leaders, one Republican (probably Senator Dole) and one Democratic one.

We realize that Mrs. Reagan does not participate in "hard news" interviews of the type "Meet the Press" usually presents. For this Special Edition, however, we plan to vary our format and would like very much to have a brief (approximately five minutes) interview with the First Lady, as well as one with Mike Deaver. We believe there are ample general areas for questioning related to Mrs. Reagan and to Mr. Deaver, which would make their appearances appropriate, if they are agreeable.

We would prefer such an interview with Mrs. Reagan to be live, with her at the White House and Marvin Kalb and Roger Mudd questioning from our studio, but the correspondents could come to the White House in advance and tape it, if necessary.

January 3, 1985

I hope it may be possible for the First Lady to accept this invitation. It would be a special pleasure and honor to have her as a guest on "Meet the Press" - the world's oldest television program.

Please let me know if you have further questions about this.

THE WHITE HOUSE WASHINGTON

I wanted to bring to your attention the fact that Jeane Kirkpatrick is adamant about having two people invited to the President's reception:

1. Amb. Klestil of Austria NO

 Phyllis Kaminský, Director of the UN Office in OK Washington.

Up until now, the categories for invitees have been:

--Head of State --Foreign Minister -- Permanent Representative in NY -- White House Staff -- State Department Asst. Secretaries

We have not deviated from these categories. If we do, we will expand our numbers quite a bit and therefore be forced to devote more time to a receiving line. I am note sure that inviting Phyllis Kaminsky would open Pandora's box that much, but I do feel that opening this reception up to Foreign Ambassadors accredited to Washington would really throw our numbers off. I have explained this to USUN and Mrs. Kirkpatrick has come back to say that she is adamant and that it would be in our national interest to have Amb. Klestil invited. Could I please have your reaction to this.

Many thanks.

LIFE WITH MY FATHER

President Reagan's son reveals the private side of the public man in this affectionate Father's Day reflection. BY RON REAGAN hat is he really like?" People constantly grill me as to the true nature of my father's character. The queries vary: Some are friendly, a few are malicious, but always implicit in them is the notion that his public persona is an affectation. It's not surprising. The behavior of public figures is generally regarded with suspicion. Actors rarely play themselves, and politicians are even more practiced at a subtler form of deception. The surprise is that my father is very much the man he seems to be in public-amiable, calm, forthright. Of course he is also much more.

The problem in describing my father is one of distance, or the lack of it. After all, I knew him before I knew much of anything else. I admit, it's difficult to be objective about the guy who spent all night putting together your Christmas toys.

Dad, himself, would be of no help in solving the "enigma." Set in his ways before self-analysis became popular, my father is not given to long hours posing tough questions to his id. If I were to ask him, "Dad, what are you really like?" he'd probably offer nothing more than a long, quizzical look, as if to say, "Where have you been for the last 25 years?" So I will simply begin as near to the beginning as my memory allows and hope for the best.

At an age when simple things brought simple pleasures, my principal delight involved riding on my father's back the length of our swimming pool. Knowing that teaching toddlers to swim was the best way to avoid anxiety over their dropping unnoticed into the deep end of the pool, Dad made sure I was happily aquatic by age three. I didn't need to be carried through the water, but there was, seemingly, no more pleasant way to go. Warm and tanned, redolent of Coppertone under a hot sun, Dad was a benevolent sea beast devoted solely to my enjoyment. I would lie flat, holding onto his shoulders, or sit, or even stand like a surfer astride his back. Nothing seemed to bother him or to impede our progress across the (Continued on page 54)

That's me at age 4, relaxing on the sand between laps (above), and at age 6, posing with Dad (right).

Intent on cultivating both body and mind, Dad, the avid athlete, was always ready and willing to take me up on a game of touch football.

pool. Now and again, Dad would turn to his small passenger and ask me if I was ready for a deep dive, the climax of any lap. Our breathing synchronized, he'd plunge beneath the surface, dragging me with him, a tiny Ahab on a kindly Moby Dick. We'd glide along for a couple of strokes through the cool blue, air bubbles streaming, before breaking the surface.

Left to me, this fun would have continued until we resembled chlorinated prunes. Inevitably, though, Dad would invite me to curl up in the palm of his hand, then hurl me, shot-put style, into the water. A final, especially powerful launching would keep me off his back until he could scramble to the safety of deck chair and newspaper.

My father is a swimmer. I've always, in one corner of my mind, thought of him that way. Broad-shouldered and longmuscled, he is physically streamlined. His emotional state-buoyant, patient, relaxed-reminds me of his aquatic grace. My father tends to travel in straight lines toward fixed objectives, yet he's flexible enough, when faced with an obstacle, to move over, under or around it with equal facility. By nature nonconfrontational, he prefers competition with himself. His life has been less a race to the top than a voyage of personal fulfillment, a sensibility he has worked hard to instill in his children.

ood parents are teachers, and like all professors, they have their own areas of expertise. Regarding day-to-day social exigencies ("Can I wear brown shoes with gray slacks?"), I went to my mother. It was also a good idea to inform Mom of any impending financial liability ("Mom, my bike has a flat tire") before advising Dad. Although consulted, of course, on all major decisions, my father was primarily a specialist on the bucolic. What is the best way to remove ticks from a dog? How should you barbecue a steak? How do you fell a dead oak, chop it into firewood, season the wood and, finally, build a fire that doesn't require the entire Sunday Times to keep it blazing?

Dad had all the answers. Any mystery involving flora, fauna, geological upheavals or acts of God—in fact, all outdoors—was his domain. One afternoon, he returned from our family's Malibu ranch to announce the discovery of "Indian soap." From a brown paper sack he produced some sticky green berries he'd discovered on one of his forays into the bush. When rubbed vigorously between the palms, he demonstrated, the berries bubbled into lather that cut through the most tenacious grit. This, he explained, was what Indian families used to wash with before the advent of soap. For days this peculiar vegetation adorned soap dishes around our house. My mother was visibly relieved when the berries finally ran out.

ad likes people. He can tolerate with a smile any amount of nettlesome behavior as long as it is well intentioned. Everyone is good until proven bad, and even bad guys have a good side, however well obscured. My father doesn't judge people by appearance or by the more superficial aspects of their personalities. He seeks, instead, a deeper core by which to rate their characters. Lessons about tolerance and the inherent goodness of people were artfully brought home to me in stories that often involved my father's formative years in Illinois.

During his late teens and early twenties, Dad was a lifeguard at the Lowell Park beach in his hometown of Dixon, Illinois. He passed the summers sitting in the sun, diving from atop a slide built onto the end of a dock and pulling hapless swimmers from the Rock River. In seven seasons on the job, he saved 77 people from drowning, dutifully recording each rescue with a notch on a log. There was another boy in town about my father's age-we'll call him Braithwaite-the son of a wealthy merchant. No one thought much of Braithwaite. He wore flashy clothes, drove his own ostentatiously large car and didn't participate in sports. All in all, it was generally thought that Braithwaite was snobbish and ineffectual.

One hot afternoon, when my father, Braithwaite and the usual crowd were gathered at the beach, a young man and his girlfriend, both from out of town, arrived on the scene. The man, trying to impress the woman, challenged her to swim with him to a platform anchored in the middle of the river. The woman resisted, explaining she wasn't a strong swimmer, but her boyfriend eventually prevailed. Sure enough, as they neared midstream, the woman foundered in the swift current. Her friend discovered his own inadequacies as a swimmer when he tried to help, for he too began to go under. As my father hit the water, he faced a dilemma. None of his ablebodied chums on the beach had realized what was happening, and alone he couldn't save both swimmers. He resolved to save the woman. The man, he hoped, might still make it by himself. As Dad neared the woman, he heard splashing behind him. To his relief and amazement. (Continued on page 56)

he saw Braithwaite, and only Braithwaite, thrashing through the water, coming to his aid. The twinkle in Dad's eye as he finished telling me that story let me know that someone I dismissed as an effete snob or a shiftless bum might sometime reveal a latent no bility and perhaps even save my life.

. Part of growing up is, first, realizing that your father isn't the strongest, handsomest, smartest man in the world; and, second, forgiving him for it so you can both enjoy a pleasant, adult relationship. By adolescence, I was thoroughly engaged in the former pursuit. l argued with Dad about anything and everything. Showing an early penchant for big issues, I frequently dragged in the themes of war and religion. My father is deeply religious in a very personal sense. My agnosticism, professed at age 12, was one of many broadsides he suffered with forbearance. As usual, he didn't press the issue too heavily or even raise his voice. "I can't tell you how much my faith has helped me over the years," he said. "That's terrific for you," I'd respond. "I guess I just don't feel it. Maybe someday." After a few more appeals to reason, I was left to my own fate, but I'm sure my absence from church on ensuing Sundays brought my father more than a few pangs of worry.

The length of my hair was another volatile point of contention—one which my father refused to concede so easily. In early adolescence I decided that a cut similar to John Lennon's was just the ticket for a smooth transition into my teen years. "You'll look like a girl," he said. With the practiced huffiness of a 13-year-old, I replied that under no circumstances would anyone mistake me for a female, even with hair to my knees. "As long as you're living under our roof..." signaled an end to the discussion. The hair stayed short until I went to boarding school.

Somewhere around the time he lost the Republican nomination for President and the point when I moved away from home, Dad began to mellow, and I began to grow up. In 1976, he ran against the incumbent from his own party, Gerald Ford, and failed. I hesitate to say that losing agreed with him, but perhaps, in a unique way, that was the case. Not that Dad wasn't always a pretty relaxed character, but after the defeat, his first campaign loss ever, he became still more easygoing. A certain sternness, rarely displayed to iriends and family but apparent in photographs -arched eyebrows and set jawevaporated. I've never asked him about this change, and it's entirely possible that he isn't even aware of it. Still, this subtle shift seemed to bode well for our relationship.

As Dad has mellowed and I've crept toward long-awaited maturity, our relationship has become more amicable, less contentious. He's more willing than ever to entertain opposing viewpoints, and I'm less strident in foisting mine upon him. Flak jackets are no longer de rigueur when we sit down at the dinner table.

Now, living in different cities, both of us busy with our jobs, we see less of each other. The time we do share seems all the more valuable. If there is a sense of chances missed and mistakes made, then there is also a feeling that, like two opponents who've faced each other across many rings, we know and respect each other's strengths and weaknesses. The best remains ahead. We still argue—some things should never change—but there's a gentlemanly, relaxed air to our current squabbles over everything from ERA to MX missiles. In short, we're friends.

A few months from now, or maybe longer, my father's term in Washington will be over. I know he can't be completely happy there. Certainly he's accomplishing goals that are important to him, but he's still wondering why Richard Nixon chose to cover over the indoor pool and turn it into a press office. The dedicated swimmer has been reduced to pumping iron for regular exercise. He spends 45 minutes most evenings in gym shorts, muttering about deltoids, lats and biceps.

But this situation can't continue indefinitely. Soon, though not soon enough for me, he'll be back at his ranch, chopping firewood. We can go back to being father and son without the "First Family" trappings. There will be time to enjoy a friendship that is still new. I'm counting on it
