Vice President's Statement - August 5, 1986

- A just and lasting peace is essential, urgent and can only be reached through negotiations.
- Negotiations should produce peace treaties between the parties based on the recognition of the right of all states and peoples in the region to a life of peace and security.
- Negotiations must take into account the security needs of Israel, the security needs of all other states in the region and the aspirations of the Palestinian people.
- Negotiations must resolve the Palestine question in all its aspects within the context of a relationship between Jordan, the West Bank and Gaza. This relationship can be achieved based on United Nations Security Council Resolutions 242 and 338. The U.S. view is that United Nations Security Council Resolutions 242 and 338 embody the principle of secure and recognized boundaries for all states in the region and the exchange of territory for peace.
- The U.S. believes in the importance of face-to-face negotiations. We recognize that direct negotiations may involve the framework of an international conference or forum structured in a way that permits progress and not paralysis; agreement, not dictates.
- The form of the negotiations should provide for talks between an Israeli delegation and a Jordanian-Palestinian delegation, as well as between Syrian and Israeli delegations. Delegations must consist of individuals who seek peace and openly reject violence and terrorism.
