MEMORANDUM FOR THE PRESIDENT

SUBJECT: MARYLAND - POLITICAL BRIEFING

I. SUMMARY

Republican Lawrence Hogan, a former U.S. Congressman and the current Executive of Prince George's County, is favored to win the Republican nomination for U.S. Senate in the September 14 primary, and face liberal Democrat incumbent U.S. Senator Paul Sarbanes in the general election. A substantial amount of money has already been spent on an extensive media campaign to expose Sarbanes' liberal voting record, however the incumbent Democrat could still win re-election to a second term if a strong Republican campaign does not develop.

In the gubernatorial race, Republican Bob Pascal, a former state Senator and the current Executive of Anne Arundel County, will pose a strong challenge to incumbent Democrat Harry Hughes. Hughes, first elected in 1978 with a huge 71% of the vote, is seeking his second term.

Maryland currently has 1 Republican and 7 Democrats in its U.S. House delegation. Although the size of the state's delegation will be unaffected by reapportionment, the Republicans have a good opportunity to pick up at least 1 seat.

The Reagan-Bush ticket fell 50,000 votes short of carrying Maryland in 1980 in this traditionally Democrat state.

II. ELECTED OFFICIALS

GOVERNOR - Harry R. Hughes - Democrat - Elected in 1978

SENATOR - Charles McC. Mathias - Republican - Elected in 1968

SENATOR - Paul Sarbanes - Democrat - Elected in 1976

III. THE STATE LEGISLATURE

UPPER HOUSE - 7 Republicans 16 Democrats

LOWER HOUSE - 16 Republicans 125 Democrats

IV. REPUBLICAN PARTY OFFICIALS

REPUBLICAN STATE CHAIRMAN - Allan Levey

REPUBLICAN NATIONAL COMMITTEEMAN - Lawrence Hogan

REPUBLICAN NATIONAL COMMITTEEWOMAN - Louise Gore

V. DISCUSSION

A. THE U.S. SENATE RACE - 1982

Democrat Paul Sarbanes is seeking his second term in the U.S. Senate. His Republican challenger this fall is likely to be the Executive of Prince George's County, Lawrence Hogan. Hogan, a 53-year-old former FBI agent, served four terms in the U.S. House from 1967 to 1975. As a member of the House Judiciary Committee in the summer of 1974, Hogan gained notoriety for advocating the impeachment of President Nixon. Hogan unsuccessfully sought the Republican gubernatorial nomination in 1974, but was upset in the primary by National Committeewoman Louise Gore, who in turn was defeated by then incumbent Democrat Governor Marvin Mandel. Besides serving as county Executive, Hogan is also Maryland's Republican National Committeeman.

In the September 14 primary, Hogan will be challenged for the Republican U.S. Senate nomination by Dallas Merrell, a Montgomery County businessman. Merrell won 13% of the Republican primary vote in a challenge to incumbent Republican U.S. Senator Mac Mathias in 1980. Although Merrell will run a professional campaign, Hogan is almost certain to win the Republican nomination.

Before his election to the U.S. Senate in 1976, Sarbanes served three terms in the U.S. House. He was also a member of the House Judiciary Committee in 1974, and drafted the first article of impeachment against President Nixon which was adopted by the committee. Sarbanes has gained a reputation for being one of the most liberal members of the U.S. Senate. More than a year ago the National Conservative Political Action Committee (NCPAC) made Sarbanes its prime target for defeat in the 1982 elections. The PAC has spent more than one-half million dollars airing television advertisements aimed at publicizing Sarbanes' liberal voting record. The results of this "anti-Sarbanes" campaign have cut both ways; polling data reveals that Sarbanes has lost some support among conservative Democrats, but the widespread media coverage of the NCPAC attack has rallied liberal support for the incumbent Senator. It appears Sarbanes will be well-financed for the fall campaign. Furthermore, it is conceded among Republican leaders in the state that Hogan, the probable GOP Senate nominee, is not the strongest Republican candidate that might have been available.

Hogan has high name-recognition throughout the state, due largely to his long career in Maryland politics. He estimates that he will be able to raise a campaign chest of $2 million for the fall campaign. However, critics claim that Hogan is already having difficulty raising funds. Also, Hogan has a number of political enemies within the state GOP, and will lack strongly united Republican support.

A March poll conducted by NCPAC showed Sarbanes leading Hogan by an unimpressive 37% to 25% margin. However, without a top-notch Republican candidate in the race, it currently appears unlikely that the liberal Democrat Senator Sarbanes will be turned out of office by the voters of this traditionally Democrat state.

B. THE GUBERNATORIAL RACE - 1982

Democrat Governor Harry Hughes is seeking a second term this year. His Republican challenger this fall will be Robert Pascal, the Executive of Anne Arundel County (Annapolis). Pascal, a former state Senator, is unopposed for the Republican nomination. His running mate for lieutenant governor will be former U.S. Congressman Newton Steers. Pascal, with a reputation as a moderate, along with Steers, who was once labeled "the most liberal Republican in the U.S. Congress," will provide the GOP with a moderate ticket which is likely to attract Democrat votes in Baltimore and suburban Washington. Pascal should also benefit from the public endorsement he received from Baltimore's popular Democrat mayor, William Schaefer.

Incumbent Democrat Governor Harry Hughes was elected to his first term in 1978 with 71% of the vote over former Republican U.S. Senator J. Glenn Beall. However, since his election, many Marylanders have come to view Hughes as an ineffective governor who is not up to the job. Although Hughes has already raised over $500,000, it seems likely that he will have to spend a good portion of that money in a campaign to win renomination in the September 14 primary. Hughes is being challenged by Democrat state Senator Harry McGuirk of Baltimore. Hughes' situation was made more difficult because of his differences with Lieutenant Governor Sam Bogley, a young outspoken conservative Democrat who has been increasingly more critical of Governor Hughes. Hughes decided to dump Bogley as his running mate this time around and sign on state Senator Gerald Curran as his choice for Lieutenant Governor. Subsequently, rather than fading into the woodwork as Hughes had hoped, Bogley teamed up with McGuirk as the candidate for Lieutenant Governor in the primary race against Hughes. Although it is still unclear how serious McGuirk's threat to Hughes might be, the Democrats are likely to be wounded by the primary battle.

A fall race between Pascal and Hughes currently seems likely. Pascal has already started a major media campaign to increase his name recognition throughout the state. The Republicans are encouraged by polls which show that Governor Hughes' favorable ratings are below the 40% mark. The Pascal-Steers ticket may prove attractive enough, even in this heavily Democrat state, to bring victory to the GOP in November.

C. THE U.S. HOUSE RACES - 1982

Reapportionment has not changed the size of Maryland's U.S. Congressional delegation. However, the state's districts have had to be redrawn to reflect the 13% population decline in the city of Baltimore during the past decade.

Five-term incumbent Marjorie Holt, Maryland's lone Republican U.S. House member, will have little problem winning re-election in her 4th Congressional district, which includes the state capital of Annapolis. Holt had once considered entering the U.S. Senate race against Democrat Paul Sarbanes, but opted to seek another term in her safe Congressional district instead.

Republicans hope to regain the 1st District seat which former Republican incumbent Bob Bauman lost to Democrat Roy Dyson in 1980. Bauman, a thoughtful conservative in the House, was defeated by a narrow margin in 1980 after he admitted having personal problems with alcoholism and homosexuality. Despite his past indiscretions, Bauman has remained popular in this Eastern Shore district, and is favored to win the Republican nomination over former state Senator Porter Hopkins. Bauman, if he wins the primary, is thought to have at least an even chance of defeating Dyson, the Democrat incumbent, this November.

In the 2nd Congressional District, which takes in most of Baltimore County, north of the city, 20-year veteran Democrat U.S. Congressman Clarence Long could prove vulnerable in a rematch challenge from Republican Helen Bentley. Bentley, a former chairman of the Federal Maritime Commission, won 43% of the vote against Long in 1980. Redistricting has removed some of the most heavily Democrat communities from Long's district, and has added more rural Republican areas.

In the 5th Congressional District, one of Maryland's two suburban Washington districts, Democrat incumbent Steny Hoyer, who won a special election to the House in 1981, will be challenged by the Reverend Perry Smith III. Smith is a black Baptist minister who switched his party registration to Republican to make this Congressional race. Smith has been promised financial assistance from the Republican National Committee, and should run well in this district where over one-third of the voters are black.

In the other suburban Washington Congressional district, the 8th, Democrat incumbent Michael Barnes is favored to defeat one of the two potential Republican nominees; Marian Greenblatt or Elizabeth Spencer, both of whom are members of the Montgomery County School Board.

The two Democrat incumbent U.S. House members who represent Baltimore, Barbara Mikulski and Parren Mitchell, should both win easy re-election to the House.

Democrat Beverly Byron seems certain to retain her 6th District seat which is comprised of Maryland's western panhandle. Byron is a conservative Democrat who has supported the President's economic program in the House.

D. REPUBLICAN STATE CHAIRMAN ALLAN LEVEY

Maryland's Republican State Chairman, Allan Levey, is a controversial figure among the state's top Republicans in the party hierarchy. Apparently, Levey is not on the best of terms with either Republican U.S. Senate candidate Lawrence Hogan, or gubernatorial candidate Robert Pascal.

Levey, however, has taken every possible opportunity to express his adamant public support for President Reagan and his policies.

Levey has recently decided to run for the Maryland state Senate from the Montgomery County-based 15th District. He has only nominal primary opposition, and will face Democrat incumbent state Senator Larry Levitan in the general election.
