MEMORANDUM FOR THE PRESIDENT

FROM: ED ROLLINS

SUBJECT: NORTH CAROLINA - POLITICAL BRIEFING

I. SUMMARY

North Carolina has a number of highly contested U.S. House races this year, and strong Republican challengers could unseat as many as four Democrat incumbents. Since there is not a U.S. Senate race or a gubernatorial race in the state this year, attention has focused on the U.S. House races. North Carolina's senior U.S. Senator, Republican Jesse Helms, heads the National Congressional Club, a conservative political action committee (PAC), which has raised close to $10 million during this election cycle. Helms' PAC has poured substantial funds into the campaigns of many Republican U.S. House candidates in North Carolina this year.

In the 4th District (Raleigh, Chapel Hill), Republican Bill Cobey, former athletic director of the University of North Carolina, appears likely to unseat five-term Democrat incumbent Congressman Ike Andrews. Cobey currently leads the Democrat incumbent by 18 points according to a recent Finkelstein poll. In three other districts, Republican challengers are waging exceptionally strong races against Democrat incumbents. In the 3rd District (Southeast Central-Goldsboro), Republican Red McDaniel, a former POW in Vietnam, is challenging three-term incumbent Democrat Charles Whitley. In the 5th District (Northwest-Winston-Salem), Republican former state Senator Anne Bagnal is running against four-term incumbent Democrat Steve Neal. In the 8th District (South Central-Kanapolis), Republican businessman Harris Blake is trying to unseat four-term incumbent Democrat Bill Hefner. Strong Republican challengers are running in two other districts, although they are currently viewed as longshot chances to win. In the 2nd District (North Central-Durham), Republican Jack Marin, a former all-American basketball player at Duke University, faces Democrat attorney Tim Valentine in the race to succeed retiring Democrat incumbent U.S. Congressman L.H. Fountain. In the 7th District (Southeast-Fayetteville), Republican businessman Ed Johnson is challenging five-term Democrat incumbent Charlie Rose.

North Carolina has four incumbent Republican Congressmen, two of whom are considered vulnerable. In the 11th District (West-Asheville), freshman Republican incumbent U.S. Congressman Bill Hendon is trying to fight off an extremely tough challenge from Democrat state Senator James Clarke. Most political observers still rate this race too close to call. In the 6th District (Greensboro, High Point), another freshman Republican incumbent, Gene Johnston, faces a stiff challenge. Johnston, however, remains slightly favored to defeat Democrat Charles Britt, a Greensboro attorney.

The state's two other Republican incumbent U.S. House members, Jim Martin in the 9th District (West Central-Charlotte), and Jim Broyhill in the 10th District (West-Gastonia) are both considered safe. Eight-term Democrat incumbent U.S. Congressman Walter Jones is heavily favored to defeat Republican challenger James McIntyre, an accountant, in the 1st District (Northeast-Greenville).

Republican U.S. Senator Jesse Helms, was elected to his second term in 1978 by a 55% to 45% margin over Democrat John Ingram. In 1980, Helms' assistance was a powerful influence in helping elect Republican John East to the U.S. Senate over incumbent Democrat Senator Robert Morgan. Senator East won his upset victory over Morgan by a narrow 10,000 vote margin. Senator Helms is expected to face a difficult re-election battle himself in two years. Speculation now is that, in 1984, popular second term incumbent Democrat Governor Jim Hunt will attempt to unseat Helms.

In 1980, the Reagan-Bush ticket carried North Carolina by a 49% to 47% margin.

V. DISCUSSION

A. NORTH CAROLINA U.S. HOUSE RACES - REPUBLICAN CHALLENGERS

The Republicans' best chance for unseating a Democrat incumbent U.S. Congressman in North Carolina is in the 4th District (Central-Raleigh, Chapel Hill), where Republican Bill Cobey is heavily favored to defeat Democrat incumbent Ike Andrews. Cobey, 43, is a former athletic director at the University of North Carolina. In 1980, he was the Republican nominee for lieutenant governor. Although he was defeated, Cobey ran a strong race, and captured 47% of the vote. After his defeat, Cobey organized the North Carolina Taxpayers Educational Coalition, an organization to promote legislation limiting state taxing and spending. In his congressional race against Andrews this year, Cobey has strongly endorsed the Administration's economic program, and is an advocate of the Balanced Budget Amendment. Senator Helms' PAC has invested heavily in this race, and Cobey's campaign is expected to spend close to $500,000. Andrews won his fifth term in 1980 with only 53% of the vote over a weak Republican candidate. Aware of Andrews' vulnerability, Governor Hunt and the state Democrat Party have made this race one of their top priorities. However, Andrews' situation was made even more precarious when, on October 2, 1982, he was arrested in Raleigh on drunken driving charges. The latest Finkelstein poll, conducted in mid-October, showed Cobey with an 18-point lead over Andrews. Although that margin may narrow somewhat during the final week of the campaign, Cobey remains heavily favored to win.

Three other Republican challengers appear to be within striking distance of Democrat incumbent U.S. Congressmen.

In the 3rd District (Southeast-Central-Goldsboro), Republican Eugene "Red" McDaniel is mounting a strong challenge to Democrat incumbent Congressman Charles Whitley. McDaniel, a 51-year-old retired Navy Captain, was shot down in 1967 on his 81st flying mission over Vietnam and spent six years as a prisoner of war. After his release, McDaniel commanded an aircraft carrier and served as a congressional liason for the Navy. McDaniel's book, Scars and Stripes, which discusses his military experiences, is a useful campaign aid in this district which has two huge military installations - Seymour Johnson Air Force Base and Camp Lejeune Marine Corps Base. In the campaign, McDaniel is attacking the Democrat incumbent, Whitley, for supporting taxpayer-funded abortions, forced busing, food stamps for strikers, and excessive government spending. Whitley, however, has served in Congress for three terms, and was a congressional aide for 20 years before his election to the House. He has maintained close contact with his constituency, and the district has a 5-to-1 Democrat advantage in voter registration. Although Whitley is slightly favored to win re-election, McDaniel, who has the funding for a final media blitz, could overcome Whitley.

In the 5th District (Northwest-Winston-Salem), Republican former state Senator Anne Bagnal is challenging Democrat incumbent U.S. Congressman Steve Neal for a second time. In 1980, Neal fought off Bagnal's challenge by only a slim 51% to 49% margin. Bagnal has been active in Republican politics for 25 years. She began this current campaign against Neal almost immediately after her 1980 defeat. Bagnal is a strong supporter of the Administration's economic program, and charges that Congressman Neal is "the most liberal, free-spending member of North Carolina's U.S. Congressional delegation." She is also strongly opposed to the Equal Rights Amendment and abortion. Neal has been helped by redistricting, which made the district more Democrat. The Democrat incumbent is slightly favored to win re-election, but Bagnal has a strong campaign, and could win an upset victory.

Another Republican upset could take place in the 8th District (South Central-Kannapolis), where Republican Harris Blake is challenging four-term incumbent Democrat Congressman Bill Hefner. Blake, a 52-year-old small businessman, was urged by local Republicans to take on Hefner. Although Blake's campaign had a late start, Senator Helms' PAC has contributed substantial financial support, which has allowed the Blake campaign to run an extensive media campaign charging that Hefner is a free-spending crony of House Speaker Tip O'Neill. Hefner, who won re-election by a 59% to 41% margin in 1980, has geared up a strong campaign of his own, realizing the strength of his Republican rival. Although the advantages of incumbency could give Hefner an edge, Blake is considered within striking distance of the Democrat incumbent.

In two other congressional districts currently held by Democrats, Republican challengers are waging strong campaigns. However, huge Democrat registration margins in these districts make the chances for Republican victory remote in both races.

In the 2nd District (North Central-Durham), where incumbent Democrat Congressman L.H. Fountain is retiring after thirty years in the House, Republican Jack Marin faces Democrat Tim Valentine. Jack Marin, a 37-year-old attorney from Durham, gained fame as an all-American basketball player at Duke University in the mid-1960s. Marin, a conservative, is receiving financial help from Helms' political action committee. However, in a district where Democrats outnumber Republicans by a 7-to-1 margin, Valentine, a former state Representative and former state Democrat chairman, is expected to win over his strong Republican challenger.

In the 7th District (Southeast-Fayetteville), Republican Ed Johnson, a 35-year-old land developer, is challenging five-term incumbent Democrat U.S. Congressman Charlie Rose. Johnson is stressing his staunch opposition to abortion, support for a school prayer amendment, and his support of the Balanced Budget Amendment. Although these views are well-received in the district, Rose appears to have enough Democrat support to win a sixth term.

In the 1st District (Northeast-Greenville), Republican James McIntyre, a 31-year-old accountant, is given little chance of defeating eight-term Democrat incumbent U.S. Congressman Walter Jones.

B. NORTH CAROLINA U.S. HOUSE RACES - REPUBLICAN INCUMBENTS

North Carolina currently has four Republican Congressmen in its eleven-member U.S. House delegation. Republican incumbent Congressman Jim Martin was re-elected to his fifth term in 1980 by a 59% to 41% margin in the 9th District (West Central-Charlotte). Martin is heavily favored to defeat Democrat challenger Preston Cornelius, a former superior court judge, to win re-election to a sixth term this year. Republican incumbent Congressman Jim Broyhill, the senior Republican in North Carolina's U.S. House delegation, won his tenth term in 1980, with 70% of the vote in the 10th District (West-Gastonia). Broyhill has no Democrat challenge this year.

The state's two freshman Republican Congressmen, Bill Hendon and Gene Johnston, both face strong Democrat challengers this year. The more vulnerable of the two Republican incumbents is Bill Hendon in the 11th District (West-Asheville). In 1980, Hendon became the first Republican elected to Congress from this district in 50 years. Hendon defeated two-term Democrat incumbent Congressman Lamar Gudger by a 54% to 46% margin. In the House, Hendon serves on the Interior and Insular Affairs Committee and the Select Committee on Aging. He has been one of the most ardent supporters of the Administration's legislative agenda. Hendon is being challenged by Democrat James Clarke, a 65-year-old state Senator who represents approximately 40% of the U.S. House district in the state legislature. Clarke, who has substantial personal wealth, is waging a large-scale media campaign, exploiting the social security issue and cuts in education. Hendon is stressing his support for passage of the Balanced Budget Amendment and a school prayer amendment. Hendon also warns his constituency that the Democrat candidate favors deferral of the third year tax cuts. Clarke, however, is well-known in this district where Democrats hold a 60% to 40% advantage in voter registration. Both campaigns admit that the outcome of this race will be extremely close.

In the 6th District (Greensboro, High Point), freshman Republican Congressman Gene Johnston won his first term in 1980 by defeating six-term Democrat incumbent Congressman Richardson Preyer, by a narrow margin of less than 4,000 votes. In the House, Johnston serves on the Budget Committee and the Education and Labor Committee. Johnston is a conservative who has been a dependable vote for the Administration on the Budget Committee. Johnston is being challenged by Democrat Charles Britt, a 40-year-old Greensboro attorney. Britt is seeking to portray Johnston as "callous and insensitive." Johnston's well-financed campaign echoes the Republican theme: "Stay the Course." Although Johnston's 1980 victory was narrow, new Republican-dominated territory has been added to this district in redistricting, and Johnston seems likely to win a second term over his Democrat challenger, Charles Britt.

MEMORANDUM FOR JAMES A. BAKER III
MICHAEL K. DEEVER

THRU: ED ROLLINS

FROM: LEE ATWATER

RE: Potential Trouble in State Chairman's Meeting in North Carolina

Although I don't want to be alarmist, I fear we may have problems in our Southern Republican State Chairman's meeting Tuesday. North Carolina Chairman, Dave Flaherty, an intense individual, may complain in Gary Arnold fashion about not being the sponsor of the North Carolina events on Tuesday.

Here are the facts:

1. Flaherty was the first person in North Carolina notified of the visit. He was called on October 14, within one hour of the decision to make the trip.
2. Dave promptly announced the visit to the press, creating chaos for the White House, the Helms organization and the Congressional candidates our stop is designed to assist.
3. We were asked personally by Senator Helms to do an event for Congressional candidates. Flaherty insisted that the visit be made on behalf of the State GOP.
4. As in every Presidential visit we make, our purpose is to impact elections rather than highlight the party.
5. Flaherty was outraged at this emphasis, and called both Jim Baker and Dick Richards to complain.
6. Dave has been contacted no less than 5 times since the decision to stop in North Carolina, in an effort to make sure he is included in the decision-making process. However, it is essential to maintain the focus of the stop on the House candidates, rather than the state party.

7. Flaherty has been calling other Republican leaders with a one-sided story of events, claiming he will use the State Chairman's meeting as a forum to discuss this with the President.

8. We have consistently tried to be helpful in North Carolina, including numerous visits by my staff and me into the state, letters for candidates, TV spots, etc.

9. Flaherty has been at odds with the Helms organization for many years including opposition to the President in the '76 and '80 primaries.

10. Finally, I think someone must point out to Dave - as I have tried - that our stops over the last two or three months have been strategically designed by us to win races, and have generally been tactically designed by Political Affairs, Advance and the local campaigns - not the state party.

Again, I do not want to be alarmist, but I do think that the President should be aware of this potential problem.

WILLIAM M. HENDON
(Republican - North Carolina)

Bill Hendon is a Freshman Congressman who represents the Eleventh District of western North Carolina (including Asheville).

He is a member of the House Committee on Interior and Insular Affairs and the Select Committee on Aging. He has been a consistent supporter of Administration initiatives.

Hendon is locked in a very difficult re-election race that is "too close to call."

EUGENE JOHNSTON
(Republican - North Carolina)

Eugene Johnston is a Freshman Republican who represents the Sixth District of North Carolina (including Greensboro and Burlington).

He is a member of the House Budget Committee and the House Committee on Education and Labor. Gene has been a consistent supporter of Administration initiatives. He is in a tough re-election campaign, but is ahead and favored to win.

SENATOR JESSE HELMS (R-NORTH CAROLINA)

Senator Jesse Helms was born in Monroe, North Carolina on October 18, 1921. He attended Wingate College and Wake Forest College. Helms served in the U.S. Navy from 1942-1945. He was administrative assistant to U.S. Senator Willis Smith (1951-1953), and in 1953 to U.S. Senator Alton Lennon. From 1960-1972, Helms was executive Vice President, WRAL-TV Raleigh.

Senator Helms was elected to the U.S. Senate, November 7, 1972, and was re-elected November 7, 1978. Senator Helms is Chairman of the Senate Agriculture, Nutrition, and Forestry Committee, and is a member of the Senate Rules and Administration Committee, the Select Committee on Ethics, and the Senate Foreign Relations Committee, where he serves as Chairman of the Subcommittee on Western Hemisphere Affairs. Senator Helms has played a leading role with conservative interest groups nationwide; is a strong proponent of anti-abortion, school prayer, and anti-busing efforts in the Senate.

Senator Helms is married to the former Dorothy Jane Coble, and they have three children; Jane, Nancy, and Charles.

As you recall, Senator Helms initiated the request for the Medal of Freedom for Kate Smith, and is most pleased that this event will occur during your trip to North Carolina.

SENATOR JOHN WARNER (R-VIRGINIA)

Senator John Warner was born on February 18, 1927. He joined the U.S. Navy at age 17, served in the Navy from 1944-1947, and then attended Washington and Lee University, graduating in 1949 with a degree in engineering.
