MEETING WITH SECRETARY REGAN AND SIX FORMER SECRETARIES OF THE TREASURY

DATE: June 28, 1983
LOCATION: Oval Office
TIME: 10:00 A.M. (15 Minutes)
FROM: Craig L. Fuller CLF

I. PURPOSE

To endorse the proposed legislation providing for increased U.S. participation in the International Monetary Fund.

II. BACKGROUND

The International Monetary Fund was established nearly forty years ago to avoid the economic restrictions and financial disruption of the interwar years and to promote a sound world economic and financial system. Under U.S. leadership the IMF has been remarkably successful in fulfilling its responsibilities and has served well the broadest of U.S. economic, foreign policy and security interests.

The world economy is currently experiencing economic and financial strains without precedent in the postwar period and the resources of the IMF are being rapidly depleted. The Congress is now being asked to approve legislation providing for the U.S. share of an increase in IMF resources. There is widespread reluctance by the Members of Congress to support this request.

Ten former Treasury Secretaries have agreed to sign an endorsement of the proposed increase. Six of them will meet with you to voice their strong support for the legislation.

III. PARTICIPANTS

Secretary Regan, C. Douglas Dillon, Henry H. Fowler, David M. Kennedy, G. William Miller, John W. Snyder, Joseph W. Barr, Ed Meese, Jim Baker, Bill Clark, Ken Duberstein, and Craig Fuller.

V. SEQUENCE OF EVENTS

- Secretary Regan will make brief remarks.
- You will make brief remarks, primarily thanking the former Secretaries for their bipartisan support.

TALKING POINTS FOR THE MEETING WITH FORMER TREASURY
SECRETARIES--JUNE 28, 1983

-- I thank you both for coming in today and for your support of our efforts to pass a supplemental appropriations measure for the International Monetary Fund (IMF).

-- I have seen the joint statement that each of you has signed and I know it will help us advance this important measure in the Congress.

-- You should know that I have met with our congressional leaders on this matter. I have told them that:

The maintenance of a sound world economy and stable financial system are essential to U.S. economic recovery as well as vital U.S. foreign policy and security interests.

The IMF is the centerpiece of U.S. strategy for dealing with the international debt problem.

Absent IMF financing, many developing countries would have to undertake severe and abrupt economic adjustment which could lead to serious political and social instability.

Confidence in U.S. leadership would be weakened were we to walk away from an institution that the U.S. created and has led for forty years under both Republican and Democratic Administrations.

-- Regarding concerns expressed by Congress, we have indicated:

The IMF is a monetary institution, and a revolving fund. The U.S. is the second largest user of IMF resources (U.K. is first).

The increase in U.S. funds for the IMF will not directly affect the budget deficit and will have only a very modest impact on Treasury borrowing requirements.

Bank regulators, in consultation with Congress, are moving to strengthen their supervisory practices and procedures over international lending by banks.

-- Hill status:

We are pushing the House to take-up the IMF authorization as soon as they return from their July 4th recess--the House will not consider the IMF supplemental until after the authorization bill is considered.

We could use broad bipartisan support from the former Treasury secretaries to help build a coalition.

Their statement will help. Anything else that the former Treasury secretaries could do or suggest to encourage the House to move on this measure will be appreciated.

JOINT STATEMENT BY FORMER SECRETARIES OF THE TREASURY:
THE NEED FOR AN INCREASE IN IMF RESOURCES

As former Secretaries of the Treasury, we want to affirm our belief that legislation providing for increased U.S. participation in the International Monetary Fund (IMF) is vital to American interests and voice our strong support for this legislation.

The IMF has been a cornerstone of U.S. foreign economic policy under Republican and Democratic Administrations for nearly forty years. It was established under U.S. leadership to avoid the economic restrictions and financial disruption of the interwar years and to promote the sound world economic and financial system essential to prosperity of all countries. The IMF has been remarkably successful in fulfilling its responsibilities and as such has served well the broadest of U.S. economic, foreign policy, and security interests.

The world economy is currently experiencing economic and financial strains without precedent in the postwar period. Many developing countries are no longer able to earn the foreign exchange to pay for needed imports and to service their debts, and could be forced to implement excessive economic contraction and disruptive trade and financial measures reminiscent of the Depression. The success of cooperative efforts to achieve an orderly resolution of these difficulties depends to a great extent on the IMF. However, the resources of the IMF are being depleted rapidly, and its ability to provide financing in support of members' balance of payments adjustment efforts will soon be exhausted.

After intensive negotiations, international agreement has been reached on measures to assure that the IMF has adequate resources to fulfill its important responsibilities. The Congress is now being asked to approve legislation providing for the U.S. share of the increase in IMF resources -- a share that is less than 20 percent of the total increase. Failure of the United States to participate in this increase in resources, for the institution that is at the center of international efforts to deal with current global financial problems, would have serious consequences for our own economic recovery and the preservation of millions of American jobs. Moreover, it would have a devastating impact on international confidence in U.S. leadership and result in severe economic and political instability in countries of vital interest to the United States.

The IMF was created in response to the lessons of the Great Depression. Unless we learn from the lessons of the past, we will inevitably repeat earlier mistakes. The costs to the United States would far exceed the investment the Congress is now being asked to approve. For these reasons, we urge prompt approval of this legislation.

PRESIDENTIAL REMARKS: LUNCHEON WITH PRESIDENT'S ADVISORY COUNCIL ON PRIVATE SECTOR INITIATIVES
TUESDAY, JUNE 28, 1983

Thank you. I'm very pleased to welcome to the White House the members of the new Advisory Council on Private Sector Initiatives, the members of the Cabinet who will be serving on the Council, Bob Galvin, our new chairman, and Bill Verity who chaired our earlier Task Force on Private Sector Initiatives.

I haven't seen so much talent gathered together at the White House since the Beach Boys were here.

But I'll tell you, we are here today to talk about a popular revolution that is going to rival rock and roll when we all look back on it.

Private Sector Initiatives are as basic as the American traditions of neighbor helping neighbor, as selfless as our millions of volunteers and as simple as a helping hand. But these private actions are part of a national movement that is sweeping across the country like a prairie fire. The American people have developed a new way of thinking about how to solve social and economic problems.

Today you can go to about any community and discover private individuals creatively solving public problems. I wish you could've been to all the places I've already been and seen the remarkable, public-spirited things I've already witnessed. And I also hear countless stories of people whom I'll never be able to meet who've taken the initiative to find private solutions to public problems. I could give you examples all afternoon of the efforts that are already being made.

In Harris County, Texas, Dr. Joel Reed and the Harris County Medical Society have developed a system whereby computers schedule indigent families into time slots that doctors donate.

The McDonald's Corporation, which is known already for its Ronald McDonald Houses, has now launched a major child safety-belt campaign in cooperation with the National Safety Council. And I hope they're just as successful with the safety program as they are with their hamburgers.

In New York, the Private Industry Council and American Express have found a new way to put homebound handicapped people to work. American Express has given word-processing equipment to handicapped employees who are now able to work in their homes. A whole new market of productive workers has been opened up.

There are examples of food banks and job-a-thons and elderly care and any number of good causes. Everywhere I travel, people are forming new coalitions to explore ways for their communities to meet child care needs, help displaced workers find new jobs, and address important community problems like drug and alcohol abuse. Everywhere you look people are developing creative solutions to our local needs.

And here because it's such an important issue, let me mention there are many, many ways the private sector could help the Nation out on its educational problems. Throughout the country, businesses are adopting schools and new educational partnerships are forming. Private citizens and parents are getting involved in schools and I hope you will take a special look at what we can do here.

Neighbor helping neighbor is an American tradition. But let me tell you something -- the secret is getting out. Not long ago I was down in Williamsburg -- you may have read about it; it was in all the papers. Well, I just learned that at the Williamsburg Summit the Japanese heard about our private sector initiatives. They've asked for information and they're studying its possibilities. If the Japanese are interested, we must really be on to something.

As members of the new Advisory Council on Private Sector Initiatives, I am asking you to contribute your energy to a national movement that is already energized. All over the country, people are finding new solutions for the problems they see in their communities. But they can use your help too.

We want to activate even more of that energy in our people. We need your help in multiplying the applications of all the good private sector ideas and projects around the country. We want the individual or company who seeks to do something about displaced workers, for example, to know there are successful programs that have worked in other communities. Bob Galvin and Jim Coyne have some proposals on how we can achieve all these ends.

We want the person with a good idea about how to help with social and economic problems to know that he or she can make a difference. We need each of you to help us find ways to build the networks, develop the partnerships, and find the resources to make seemingly small ideas become national solutions to broad problems.

This is a call to action. We need your help -- the Nation needs your help -- to ensure that our communities, our volunteers, our service organizations and corporations are active participants in solving our critical problems. I believe in what Americans can do for each other. And I believe in what you on this Council can do. I want to thank you for your service to America and to her people. And I look forward to the good work you will do. God bless you.
