RECEPTION FOR SUPREME COURT JUSTICES

Monday, October 3, 1983

The Residence

The Blue Room

5:15 p.m.

From: Fred F. Fielding

I. PURPOSE

To continue the tradition of formally acknowledging the opening of the Court Term on the First Monday in October.

II. BACKGROUND

Historically, the Justices visited the President each year to formally advise him that its Term was about to convene. The original purpose was to let him know that all of the Justices had survived their journeys back to Washington. This custom has been sporadically observed since the Eisenhower Administration. Your luncheon in honor of the Justices last year was very well received by them and several have privately praised your interest in reestablishing social "comity".

Honorable Thurgood Marshall, Associate Justice
Honorable Harry A. Blackmun, Associate Justice

Honorable John Paul Stevens, Associate Justice

TALKING POINTS
WHITE HOUSE RECEPTION FOR THE SUPREME COURT JUSTICES
October 3, 1983

- Last year we renewed the tradition of having an annual gathering to commemorate the start of a new Term of the Supreme Court. That tradition had its historic roots in the days when the Justices would call upon the President to inform him that they had survived the rigors of another round of circuit riding and were ready to begin their work in Washington. I know you don't face the hardships of stagecoach and horseback as your predecessors did, but I'm told that the huge stacks of petitions that greet you every day during the summer months can be just as bad.
 - The presence of the Supreme Court reminds me of a true story about a previous occupant of this House, Abraham Lincoln. The Civil War was raging around Washington and Lincoln decided to inspect the fortifications. He was being shown around by a young aide to the commanding general, and Lincoln and the aide walked right up to the front lines. Suddenly, shots rang out from the Confederate forces, and the young aide knocked Lincoln to the ground, shouting, "Get down, you fool!" The aide thought that his career was over, but when Lincoln finished his tour and turned to leave, he looked at the aide and said, "Good bye, Captain Holmes, I'm glad to see that you know how to talk to a civilian." Captain Holmes went on to become Justice Oliver Wendell Holmes, Jr. I've often wondered if the thrill of manhandling a President is what put it into Holmes' mind to become a Justice of the Supreme Court.
 - The differences of opinion that must on occasion arise between the three branches of our Government should never obscure the fact that we are all engaged in the same noble experiment our forefathers embarked upon when they framed our Constitution. To paraphrase what one of the Justices (Brennan) said of differences of opinion on the Court itself, we have a harmony of aims if not always of views.
 - Referring to the Supreme Court, Justice Holmes once said, "We are very quiet there, but it is the quiet of a storm center, as we all know." It is a mark of the respect Americans have for the rule of law and for the Supreme Court as an institution that bitter disputes can be resolved in the quiet of your chambers.

-- As you begin the new Term and embark on the writing of another chapter in the history of our Constitution, know that you do so with the enduring respect and best wishes of the American people. We know that your work demands courage in as great a measure as wisdom. We know the enormity of the challenges you face, but we are also confident that, with God's grace, you will rise to meet them.
