Dear Mr. Blackwell, 9/24/83

Hi! I hope you're well & being blessed by God in a mighty way because of your interest in the Year Of the Bible campaign.

At present we are having 3 key conferences. As a leader, could you promote these conferences as much as possible through your organization? Your help in our recruiting efforts will be greatly appreciated & will add to the overall effectiveness of the Year of the Bible Campaign.

Thanks for your help. If I or the National team can be of help to you please call.

Sincerely yours,

John Uffelmänn

Dear Bill:

In preparing for the October 11 meeting. I find that everything we plan for the remaining three months is in financial jeopardy. At the nine month point we have expended about one-half the budget, or approximately $400,000 in preparation for the final media phase which is now unfunded.

Bill, it would be sad indeed to position ourselves as well as we have and then not be able to close. I must believe that it is God's will for us to encourage every American to read the Bible, so I continue to pursue every avenue, to knock on every door, to encourage everyone who will listen that the time is now! But without funds we have literally come to a standstill.

If the National Committee knew of our desperate position, I feel certain they would do their part to keep us solvent--so many have already given gifts ranging from $1,000 to $20,000, but now I would like each one to consider a gift--personal or organizational--to close out this year with the same enthusiasm which marked its beginning.

Bill, so much good is happening in every area that our October 11 meeting will literally be a praise report. I can't begin to tell you of all the spontaneous grass-roots activities from Florida to California focusing on schools or business, churches or media. Readers Digest, Atlanta Constitution and the series in Guideposts don't begin to tell the story. People are finally realizing that this year is unique in history-- and still provides a window of opportunity we may never see again, but without funds the media thrust will be severely curtailed.

For these good reasons I don't want this meeting to be marred by a dismal financial report, so with your approval I will send copies of this letter, this week to the entire National Committee, asking them to respond next week, before our meeting in Chicago on the 11th. We will need the funds just to hold the meeting.

Sincerely,

NOTICE OF MOTION AND DEFENDANT'S MOTION
FOR JUDGMENT ON THE PLEADINGS

19 PLEASE TAKE NOTICE that on October 3, 1983, at 10:00 a.m., or 20 as soon thereafter as counsel may be heard, in the courtroom of 21 the Honorable Manuel L. Real, Chief United States District Judge, 22 the defendant will move for Judgment on the Pleadings pursuant to 23 Rule 12(c) and 12(h)(3) of the Federal Rules of Civil Procedure.
24 The basis for the motion is that (1) the Court lacks subject 25 matter jurisdiction over this action because plaintiffs lack 26 standing to sue, (2) the Court may not grant plaintiffs declara-27 tory or injunctive relief based upon defendant's participation on 28 the National Committee for the Year of the Bible because

1 defendant's presence on the Committee does not constitute 2 "government action" for purposes of the First Amendment; and 3 (3) the Court lacks personal jurisdiction over defendant Reagan.

4 In support of this motion, the Court and plaintiffs are 5 respectfully referred to the attached Memorandum of Points and 6 Authorities and the pleadings previously filed in this action.

7 Respectfully submitted,

20 Joint Resolution 165, Pub.L. 97-280, 96 Stat. 211, called 21 upon the President to designate 1983 as a National Year of the 22 Bible.^{*/} On February 3, 1983 President Reagan issued the 23

24 */ The Resolution was passed by the Senate on March 31, 1982 (128 25 Cong. Rec. S3156-57 (daily ed. March 31, 1982)), by the House of 26 Representatives on September 21, 1982 (128 Cong. Rec. H7350 (daily 27 ed. Sept. 21, 1982)), and was signed into law by President Reagan 28 on October 4, 1982.

1 requested Proclamation designating 1983 as the Year of the 2 Bible.*/ In pertinent part, the Proclamation states:

3 The Congress of the United States, in 4 recognition of the unique contribution of the 5 Bible in shaping the history and character of 6 this Nation, and so many of its citizens, has 7 by Senate Joint Resolution 165 authorized and 8 requested the President to designate the year
9 1983 as the "Year of the Bible."

10 Now, Therefore, I, Ronald Reagan, President
11 of the United States of America, in recognition 12 of the contributions and influence of the Bible 13 on our Republic and our people, do hereby pro-14 claim 1983 the Year of the Bible in the United 15 States. I encourage all citizens, each in his 16 or her own way to reexamine and rediscover its 17 priceless and timeless message.

18 19 WEEKLY COMP. OF PRES. DOC. 181-82 (Feb. 7, 1983).

19 Plaintiffs, ministers and rabbis of various religious faiths,
20 other religious leaders, and some individuals professing no
21 religious beliefs, brought this suit on April 21, 1983, seeking a 22 judgment declaring unconstitutional the Resolution and the imple-23 menting Presidential Proclamation. They contend that both the 24 Resolution, and the subsequent Proclamation violate their first 25 amendment right to be free from laws respecting the establishment 26 of religion. Plaintiffs later filed an amended complaint adding 27 allegations relating to defendant Reagan's honorary chairmanship 28 of the National Committee for the Year of the Bible, ("the Committee"), a non-profit, non-governmental group of Christian and Jewish leaders. They seek a declaration that defendant's

*/ On December 31, 1982, in Gaylor v. Reagan, et al., (No. 82-C-985-D), a suit challenging the constitutionality of the Resolution, the United States District Court for the Western District of Wisconsin refused to grant injunctive relief, which would have prevented President Reagan from issuing the Proclamation.

1 membership on the Committee violates the Establishment Clause, and 2 an injunction prohibiting defendant from "using the power and 3 prestige of the presidency in his service as honorary chairman of 4 the [Committee] including appearing in literature or other 5 endorsements promoting the Bible." (Complaint, pp. 15-16.)

6 Plaintiffs assert four types of "injuries" as a result of the 7 Resolution and Proclamation. First, plaintiffs allege that they 8 are harmed because "some" of them do not accept the Bible as the 9 "Word of God" and cannot read it without violating their own 10 non-Christian religious and atheist beliefs. (Plaintiffs' First 11 Amended Complaint ¶ 28, hereafter "Comp."). Second, the non-12 Christian plaintiffs allege that the Resolution and the Proclama-13 tion single them out for "disadvantageous treatment" due to their 14 "minority religious status." (Id.) Third, the non-Christian 15 plaintiffs, who characterize themselves as religious leaders, 16 allegedly suffer "the additional harm of having the prestige and 17 power of the United States of America endorse the Christian 18 Bible," which undermines their ability to provide religious, 19 spiritual and atheist leadership. (Id.) Finally, the Christian 20 plaintiffs assert injury based on having "their religious book," 21 the Bible, used for political rather than religious purposes, 22 thereby impeding their efforts "to promote and engage in bene-23 ficial ecumenical dialogue" with non-Christians. (Id.)

24 The "injuries" plaintiffs allegedly suffer as a result of 25 defendant Reagan's honorary membership on the Bible Committee are 26 three-fold. First, plaintiffs assert that the defendant is "using

1 the power and prestige of the presidency" to promote Committee 2 activities, thereby singling out the non-Christian plaintiffs for 3 disadvantageous treatment as persons with "minority religious 4 status." (Comp. ¶ 36). Second, the non-Christian religious 5 leader plaintiffs are allegedly harmed for the additional reason
6 that the symbolic weight of defendant's presence on the Committee 7 undermines their ability to provide religious, spiritual and 8 atheist leadership. (Id.) Finally, the Christian plaintiffs 9 assert injury based on having "the United States" endorse an 10 organization that supports "their" Bible for political rather than 11 religious purposes. (Id.).

12 Plaintiffs' complaint abounds with assertions of "injury"
13 based upon how these challenged actions affect their sensibili-14 ties. They are "offended" and "appalled" at being urged to read 15 the Bible, "affronted" by what they characterize as the "exploita-16 tion of [their] religious symbols for political purposes," and, 17 further, "believe" that the Resolution and the Proclamation have 18 made it "harder for them" "to call themselves good Americans with 19 pride." (Comp. ¶¶ 13, 14, 16, 17). Their "spiritual and atheist
20 leadership" is undermined by the President's honorary Chairmanship 21 of the National Committee for the Year of the Bible, an organiza-22 tion they maintain supports "the Bible[] for political rather than 23 religious purposes. (Comp. ¶¶ 35, 36.) Moreover, plaintiffs 24 "believe" that the Resolution and Proclamation "do not play fair 25 in that they hypostatize one religious text," and "make it a civic 26 duty to read" the Bible, while "ignoring the beliefs" of 27 plaintiffs. Plaintiffs further "believe" that "governmental

1 urging of Bible reading is an insensitive disservice to persons of 2 other faiths" and is "wrong." (Comp. ¶¶ 6, 7, 9, 10).

3 But plaintiffs' beliefs and fears, no matter how sincerely 4 held, are insufficient to establish an Article III "case or 5 controversy." The challenged actions have not actually harmed 6 plaintiffs and could never provide the injury necessary to render 7 this a justiciable case or controversy. Neither the Resolution
8 nor the Proclamation have any consequences other than the designa-
9 tion of 1983 as the Year of the Bible. The President's involve-10 ment with the wholly private committee similarly causes plaintiffs 11 no injury. No federal funds are to be expended, no federal 12 facilities are to be made specially available, and contrary to 13 what plaintiffs maintain, no federal sponsorship is extended to 14 any activities or organizations in connection with the designation
15 of 1983 as the Year of the Bible. Thus, plaintiffs' complaint 16 does not, and cannot, allege any concrete or actual injury, and 17 therefore, fails to allege an "injury-in-fact," a basic and 18 necessary element of standing. Further, plaintiffs' complaint 19 fails to indicate how any injury they claim is traceable to the 20 putatively illegal conduct of the defendant, and how they might 21 benefit in some tangible way if the Court were to afford them the 22 relief they seek.

23 In essence, what plaintiffs seek is not relief from or 24 compensation for some injury inflicted by the defendant, but 25 rather to have the Court direct the federal government and defend-26 ant Reagan to act in accordance with their personal views of the 27 Constitution; their "injury" thus consists solely of an alleged 28 violation of a personal constitutional right to a government that

1 does not establish religion. But Article III's standing 2 requirement are not satisfied by a group of citizens' claims of 3 injury flowing solely from nonobservance of the Constitution.

4 In addition, to the extent the plaintiffs seek any relief
5 with respect to defendant Reagan's honorary membership on the Year 6 of the Bible Committee, they have also failed to state a claim for 7 which relief can be granted. It is axiomatic that the Religious 8 Clauses apply only to acts or conduct of the state or federal 9 governments. While defendant Reagan is always President of the 10 United States, not every act of the President constitutes 11 governmental action for first amendment purposes. The President, 12 as any other citizen, has the right to hold and espouse his 13 personal religious beliefs. Defendant Reagan's membership on the 14 non-governmental Year of the Bible Committee^{*/} no more 15 involves the Establishment Clause than does his attendance at the 16 religious service or worship of his choice.

17 Finally, at least as to the injunctive and declaratory relief
18 sought with respect to his membership on the Committee, the Court 19 lacks personal jurisdiction over defendant Reagan; there are 20 insufficient contacts with this forum to satisfy due process 21 concerns.

22 ARGUMENT

23 I. PLAINTIFFS LACK STANDING 24 TO MAINTAIN THIS SUIT

25 No principle is more fundamental to the proper functioning of 26 the judiciary in our tripartite system of government than the

27 ^{*/} As is clear from Exhibit C to plaintiffs' complaint, the 28 Committee is "an inter-faith, non-profit, non-governmental group of outstanding Christian and Jewish leaders formed independently to help focus attention on the year-long observance."

1 Article III limitation confining the judicial power of federal 2 courts to "actual cases or controversies." Simon v. Eastern 3 Kentucky Welfare Rights Organization, 426 U.S. 26, 37 (1976).
4 This requirement is "not satisfied merely because a party requests 5 a court of the United States to declare its legal rights, and has 6 couched that request for forms of relief historically associated 7 with courts of law in terms that have a familiar ring to those 8 trained in the legal process." Valley Forge Christian College v.
9 Americans United for Separation of Church and State, 454 U.S. 464, 10 471 (1982). Federal courts are not simply forums for the "venti-11 lation of public grievances or the refinement of jurisprudential 12 understandings," with "unconditioned authority to determine the 13 constitutionality of legislative or executive acts" or "to declare 14 the rights of individuals and measure the authority of govern-15 ments." Id. at 473. Rather, federal courts can of constitutional 16 necessity only "adjudge the legal rights of litigants in actual 17 controversies." Liverpool S.S. Co. v. Commissioners of 18 Emigration, 113 U.S. 33, 39 (1885).

19 As part of this bedrock principle, the federal courts have 20 insisted that the litigant seeking to invoke the judicial power 21 have "standing" to challenge the action at issue. The focus of 22 this standing element of the "case or controversy" doctrine is 23 thus on the litigant "seeking to get his claim before a federal 24 court, and not on the issues he wishes to have adjudicated."

25 Flast v. Cohen, 392 U.S. 83, 99 (1968).

26 In essence the question of standing is whether 27 the litigant is entitled to have the court 28 decide the merits of the dispute or particular

1 issue. This inquiry involves both constitu-
2 tional limitations on federal court jurisdiction and prudential limitations on its exercise.
3 In both dimensions it is founded on concerns 4 about the proper - and properly limited - role of the courts in a democratic society.

5 Warth v. Seldin, 422 U.S. 490, 498 (1973) (citations omitted)
6 (emphasis added).

7 To have standing the litigant must first demonstrate that he 8 personally has suffered "injury-in-fact," that is, some "actual or 9 threatened injury as a result of the putatively illegal conduct of 10 the defendant." Gladstone, Realtors v. Village of Bellwood, 441
11 U.S. 1, 99 (1979). The injury must be "distinct and palpable," 12 rather than abstract or hypothetical. Id. at 100. The federal 13 courts have consistently refused to take cognizance of suits 14 predicated on the alleged harm caused by the failure of the 15 government to conform to a citizen-plaintiff's view of 16 constitutionally correct action.

17 Underlying this rule is the judicial refusal to transform the 18 federal court system into an open forum for citizens operating as 19 private attorneys general in search of alleged unconstitutional 20 executive or legislative action. Ex Parte Levitt, 302 U.S. 633, 21 634 (1937) (per curiam); Fairchild v. Hughes, 258 U.S. 126, 22 129-130 (1922). Thus, "mere 'interest in a problem,' no matter 23 how longstanding the interest and no matter how qualified the 24 [plaintiff] is in evaluating the problem," is not sufficient to 25 confer standing to sue. Sierra Club v. Morton, 405 U.S. 727, 739
26 (1972). "Abstract injury," (O'Shea v. Littleton, 414 U.S. 488, 27 494 (1974)), "abstract concerns with a subject that could be 28 affected by an adjudication," (Simon v. Eastern Ky. Welfare Rights Org., supra, 426 U.S. at 40)), or "[e]motional involvement in a

1 lawsuit" (Ashcroft v. Mattis, 431 U.S. 171, 173 (1977)), do not 2 provide the requisite "'injury-in-fact.'"

3 The standing doctrine also mandates that federal court juris-4 diction be invoked only when that distinct and palpable injury can 5 be fairly traced to the challenged conduct, and the plaintiff
6 would benefit in a tangible way from the court's intervention.
7 Warth v. Seldin, supra, 422 U.S. at 508. This insures the framing 8 of the issue by the precise facts to which the court's ruling
9 would apply.^{*/} Schlesinger v. Reservists Committee to Stop 10 the War, 418 U.S. 208 (1974).

11 As most recently formulated by the Supreme Court, the 12 constitutionally mandated aspects of the standing doctrine thus 13 require

14 the party who invokes the court's authority 15 to "show that he personally has suffered some 16 actual or threatened injury as a result of 17 the putatively illegal conduct of the defen-18 dant," and that the injury "fairly can be 19 traced to the challenged action" and is likely 20 to be redressed by a favorable decision.
21 (citations omitted).

18 Valley Forge Christian College v. Americans United for Separation 19 of Church and State, Inc., supra, 454 U.S. at 472 ("Valley 20 Forge").

21 In addition, the Supreme Court has recognized prudential 22 limits on the class of persons who may invoke the courts'

24 ^{*/} The discrete factual context guaranteed by the limitation 25 that federal judicial power be available only to remedy actual 26 injury helps insure that the power to adjudicate the constitution-27 ality of governmental action is "legitimate only in the last 28 resort, and as a necessity in the determination of a real, earnest and vital controversy." Chicago & Grand Trunk Ry. v. Wellman, 143
U.S. 339, 345 (1892).

1 decisional and remedial authority. First, resistant to having the 2 federal courts transformed into debating societies that would 3 decide abstract questions of wide public significance when no
4 individualized rights are implicated, the Supreme Court has held 5 that when the asserted injury-in-fact is but a generalized 6 grievance shared in substantially equal measure by all or most 7 citizens, that interest will not provide standing. Id. at 475, 8 quoting, Gladstone, Realtors v. Village of Bellwood, 441 U.S. at 9 100. Second, a litigant must assert his own legal right to 10 relief, and claims based on the rights of third parties are 11 barred, even if those third party claims state injury sufficient 12 to satisfy Article III.*/ Valley Forge, supra, at 474.

13 These standing components -- personal injury-in-fact, 14 redressability and particularized grievance -- present the federal 15 courts with threshold questions concerning its power to even 16 entertain a suit. Accordingly, a litigant's failure to demon-
17 strate compliance with any one of these requirements mandates 18 dismissal.

19 The rules of standing, whether as aspects of 20 the Art. III case-or-controversy requirement
21 or as reflections of prudential considerations
22 defining and limiting the role of the courts, 23 are threshold determinations of the propriety 24 of judicial intervention. It is the responsibility of the complainant clearly to allege facts demonstrating that he is a proper party to invoke judicial resolution of the dispute and the exercise of the court's remedial powers.

25 */ A third prudential limitation not applicable here requires 26 that a plaintiff's complaint fall within the zone of interest to 27 be protected or regulated by the statute in question. Valley
Forge, supra, citing Data Processing Service v. Camp, 397 U.S.
28 150, 153 (1978).

1 Warth v. Seldin, supra, 422 U.S. at 517-18 (emphasis added). See 2 also Schlesinger v. Reservists Committee to Stop the War, supra; 3 Linda R.S. v. Richard D., 410 U.S. 614 (1973).

4 These standing rules are not relaxed because the plaintiff 5 seeks adjudication of a constitutional issue. The exercise of the 6 judicial power is, of course, "most vivid when a federal court 7 declares unconstitutional an act of the Legislative or Executive 8 Branch" (Valley Forge, supra, 454 U.S. at 473), but this "formid-9 able means of vindicating individual rights" must be employed 10 wisely so as not to threaten "the continued effectiveness of the 11 federal courts in performing that role." Id. Thus, no special 12 exception to the standing doctrine can be made because the liti-13 gant claims that an act of the representative branches of the 14 federal government has transgressed some constitutional prohibi-
15 tion. Id. at 488-490. A proper regard for the co-equal branches 16 of the federal government dictates that the Judicial Branch will 17 "refrain from passing upon the constitutionality of an act [of the 18 representative branches] unless obliged to do so in the proper 19 performance of [the] judicial function, when the question is 20 raised by a party whose interests entitled him to raise it."
21 Blair v. United States, 250 U.S. 273, 279 (1919).

22 Here, plaintiffs maintain that the Resolution and Proclama-23 tion, as well as the President's involvement with the wholly 24 private Committee violate the Establishment Clause. Plaintiffs, 25 however, have failed to allege any concrete or actual injury
26 sustained by them as a result of the allegedly unconstitutional 27 legislative and executive branch actions. No matter how sincere

1 or strongly held are plaintiffs' interests in the proper separa-
2 tion of church and state, such concerns do not substitute for 3 judicially cognizable injury. Because plaintiffs merely allege 4 injury to a principle, rather than direct and tangible injury to 5 themselves, they are situated no differently than all other 6 citizens concerned with governmental observance of first amendment 7 strictures. See, e.g., Schlesinger v. Reservists Committee to 8 Stop the War, supra. Their personal interest is no different than 9 that of a citizen claiming that "In God We Trust" should be 10 stricken from federal currency, or that the Marshal of the Supreme 11 Court should abandon the traditional cry "God Save This Honorable 12 Court." Under Article III requirements, no individual citizen 13 would have a direct and palpable interest in the resolution of 14 such claims no matter how emotional or sincere the con-15 cern.^{*/} Moreover, none of the purported injuries suffered by 16 the plaintiffs are redressable by the relief they seek, a fact 17 that further underscores plaintiffs' lack of standing.

18 That plaintiffs' complaint attempts to set out an Establish-19 ment Clause violation does not create a lower standing threshold 20 for their suit. Claims of violation of the Establishment Clause, 21 like other claims of constitutional impropriety, are matters for 22 judicial cognizance only if the well-defined standing criteria are 23 satisfied. Valley Forge, supra, 454 U.S. at 483-90.

24
25 */ See generally, School District of Abington Township v.
26 Schempp, 374 U.S. 203, 213 (1963); Zorach v. Claussen, 343 U.S.
27 306, 312-13 (1952).

1 A. Plaintiffs Have Alleged No Concrete
2 And Particularized Injury

3 Absent from the complaint in this action is any indication of 4 how the disputed governmental actions have had a concrete and 5 adverse effect upon plaintiffs. The plaintiffs characterize 6 themselves variously as Christian and non-Christian "taxpayers," 7 "parents" "ministers," "religious," "spiritual" and "atheist"
8 "leaders." According to some of the plaintiffs, the challenged 9 Resolution and Proclamation "take the Bible away from people whose 10 holy text it is and utilize it for political purposes." (Comp.
11 ¶ 7). The non-Christian plaintiffs allege, alternatively, that 12 the Bible is a "man-written document" without "religious author-13 ity," or that it is "superstition and mythology" and not the "Word 14 of God." (Id. at ¶ 10, 11). This group of plaintiffs generally 15 feels singled out for "disadvantageous treatment" on the basis of 16 their "minority religious status." (Id.) The plaintiffs who 17 characterize themselves as religious leaders allege generally that 18 the Resolution and Proclamation render their task of providing 19 spiritual, religious and atheist leadership more difficult, and 20 the President's membership on the Committee is said to undermine 21 that leadership. (Id. at ¶¶ 28, 36).

22 Although each plaintiff complains of the Resolution and 23 Proclamation in a separate paragraph in the complaint, the collec-24 tive legal position of the entire plaintiff group is clear: they 25 are all dedicated to the principles of separation of church and 26 state, and such dedication is itself sufficient under Article III 27 to give rise to a particular and concrete injury.

1 First, plaintiffs' complaint fails to establish how their 2 concerns for the principles of church-state separation, whether 3 based upon atheist, agnostic, Christian or non-Christian beliefs, 4 are any different from the interest held by all citizens desirous 5 of governance according to constitutional principles. The notion 6 that any person asserting a violation of the Establishment Clause 7 has a "spiritual stake" sufficient to confer standing was expressly 8 rejected by the Supreme Court in Valley Forge as a misconstruction 9 of its statement in Association of Data Processing Service Org. v.
10 Camp, 397 U.S. 150, 154 (1970), that "a person or family may have 11 a spiritual stake in First Amendment values sufficient to give 12 standing to raise issues concerning the Establishment Clause and 13 Free Exercise Clause." "That language," the Court commented, 14 "will not bear that weight." 454 U.S. at 486 n.22.

15 Second, the complaint advances conclusory and speculative 16 assertions of "injury," unadorned by any supporting factual alle-
17 gations, which purport to assign a particular cause to infinitely 18 complex human behavior. Standing cannot be based upon such specu-19 lative claims of "injury." See Winpingsinger v. Watson, 628 F.2d 20 133 (D.C. Cir.), cert. denied, 446 U.S. 929 (1980).

21 Finally, the recited allegations are also fatally defective 22 as they fail to identify any distinct and palpable injury to 23 plaintiffs as a consequence of the allegedly unconstitutional 24 actions of which they complain. The complaint simply expresses 25 plaintiffs' fears that the Resolution and Proclamation may 26 undermine their declared goals of safeguarding the principle of 27 separation of church and state, and promoting the influence of 28 other religious, ecumenical or atheist teachings. They believe

1 that the challenged Resolution and Proclamation as well as the 2 President's role with the Committee violate those principles, and 3 cause them apprehension that their mere existence will make these 4 philosophical goals more difficult to achieve.

5 These abstract, speculative anxieties are no different from 6 the concerns alleged by the plaintiffs in Valley Forge and are 7 strikingly similar to the type of abstract injuries repeatedly 8 rejected by the Supreme Court as sufficient to confer stand-9 ing.^{*/} In all those cases, the respective plaintiffs predi-10 cated their right to initiate suit on an articulated interest in 11 constitutional governance, expressed as a specific harm to the 12 interest. Standing was denied not because the stated interest was 13 not cognizable, but because the respective plaintiffs failed to 14 show how they had suffered some concrete injury as a result of the 15 challenged actions. The same is true here.

16 "The federal courts have abjured appeals to their authority 17 which would convert the judicial process into 'no more than a 18 vehicle for the vindication of the value interests of concerned 19 bystanders.'" Valley Forge, supra at 454 U.S. at 473, quoting 20 United States v. SCRAP, 412 U.S. 669, 687 (1973). A persuasive 21 and unbroken line of decisions make plain that this Court lacks 22 jurisdiction to address what amounts to nothing more than a 23 complaint by plaintiffs that as citizens they believe that the 24 co-equal branches are operating in a manner inimical to their view 25 of constitutional government.

26
27 ^{*/} E.g., Schlesinger v. Reservists Committee to Stop the War, supra; United States v. Richardson, 418 U.S. 166 (1974); Ex parte 28 Levitt, 302 U.S. 633 (1937).

1 For example, in Ex parte Levitt, 302 U.S. 633 (1937), the 2 Supreme Court held that individual citizens lack standing to 3 challenge the constitutionality of the appointment of a Supreme 4 Court Justice. While acknowledging the importance of such a 5 judicial selection to all citizens, the Court concluded that:

6 The motion papers disclose no interest up-7 on the part of the petitioner other than 8 that of a citizen and a member of the bar
9 of this Court. That is insufficient. It 10 is an established principle that to entitle 11 a private individual to invoke the judicial 12 power to determine the validity of execu-
13 tive or legislative action he must show 14 that he has sustained or is immediately in 15 danger of sustaining a direct injury as the 16 result of that action and it is not suffi-
17 cient that he has merely a general interest
18 common to all members of the public.

19 Id. at 634.

20 More recently, in two companion cases, the Court reiterated 21 these principles in the strongest terms. In United States v.
22 Richardson, supra, the plaintiff sought to obtain a declaration 23 that the Central Intelligence Act of 1949^{*/} was unconstitu-24 tional because it permitted the Central Intelligence Agency to 25 account for its expenditures solely on the certificate of the 26 Director, and thus violated Article I, section 9, clause 7 of the 27 Constitution by allowing expenditures of public monies without a 28 regular public accounting. Although the plaintiff in Richardson contended that this constitutional violation directly interfered with a personal interest -- a right to cast a ballot as an informed citizen -- the Court concluded that the asserted claim did not specify a concrete personal injury.

*/ Ch. 695, § 4, 63 Stat. 880, (current version at 50 U.S.C.
§§ 403-403j (1976)).

1 The [plaintiff's] claim is that without 2 detailed information on CIA expenditures -- 3 and hence its activities -- he cannot 4 intelligently follow the actions of Congress
5 or the Executive, nor can he properly fulfill 6 his obligations as a member of the electorate 7 in voting for candidates seeking national 8 office.

9 This is surely the kind of a generalized 10 grievance described in both Frothingham and 11 Flast since the impact on him is plainly 12 undifferentiated and "common to all members of 13 the public."

14 418 U.S. at 176-177.

15 In Schlesinger v. Reservists, supra, the plaintiffs, who 16 opposed military involvement in Vietnam, sued both in their 17 capacity as taxpayers and as "citizens." The suit challenged the 18 membership of some one-hundred members of Congress in the Military 19 Reserves, claiming that this dual membership violated the 20 Incompatibility Clause of the Constitution,^{*/} and exposed 21 Congress as an institution to "the possibility of undue influence 22 by the Executive Branch" during the Vietnam conflict. 418 U.S. at 23 212.

24 Despite the gravity of the harm alleged, the Court held that 25 the plaintiffs lacked standing to sue in their capacity as citi-
26 zens. The alleged constitutional violation, the Court declared, 27 "would adversely affect only the generalized interest of all 28 citizens in constitutional governance, and that is an abstract injury" (418 U.S. at 217). The Court added that "standing to sue may not be predicated upon an interest of the kind alleged here

*/ "No person holding any office under the United States shall be a Member of either House during his Continuance in office."
United States Constitution Art. I, § 6 Cl. 2.

1 which is held in common by all members of the public, because of 2 the necessarily abstract nature of the injury all citizens share.
3 Concrete injury, whether actual or threatened, is that 4 indispensable element of a dispute which serves in part to cast it 5 in a form traditionally capable of judicial resolution" (Id. at 6 220-221). According to the Court,

7 [t]o permit a complainant who has no concrete 8 injury to require a court to rule on important 9 constitutional issues in the abstract would 10 create the potential for abuse of the judicial 11 process, distort the role of the Judiciary in its relationship to the Executive and the Legislature and open the Judiciary to an arguable charge of providing "government by injunction."

12 Id. at 222. The Court thus emphatically refused to accept the 13 proposition that "all constitutional provisions are enforceable by 14 any citizen simply because citizens are the ultimate beneficiaries 15 of those provisions. Such a proposition, the Court declared, "has 16 no boundaries." Id. at 227.

17 Most recently the Supreme Court in Valley Forge, supra, 18 applied these standing principles, this time in the context of an 19 Establishment Clause suit. The plaintiffs in Valley Forge were an 20 organization and four of its members who, like plaintiffs here, 21 were avowedly dedicated to the constitutional principle of 22 separation of church and state. They brought suit to challenge 23 the conveyance by the United States of federal property to the 24 Valley Forge Christian College, alleging that this transfer of 25 federal property to a sectarian school violated the Establishment 26 Clause.

1 In again rejecting claims to "citizen" standing,^{*/} the 2 Court stressed the constitutional nature of the injury-in-fact 3 component of the standing doctrine. The Court held that the 4 plaintiffs in Valley Forge had failed to allege any concrete 5 injury "other than the psychological consequences presumably 6 produced by observation of conduct with which one disagrees," an 7 injury that did not differentiate the plaintiff from any citizen 8 who disapproved of the transfer on philosophical grounds.
9 Concrete adversity is guaranteed not by the intensity of plain-10 tiffs' interest in enforcing constitutional rights, the Court 11 added, but by the presence of actual, individualized injury-in-12 fact. Id. at 485-86.

13 Two cases underline the distinction Valley Forge draws 14 between an injury sufficient to confer standing to raise an Estab-
15 lishment Clause issue, and a concern that is not. In Doremus v.
16 Board of Education, 342 U.S. 429 (1952), plaintiffs, citizens-17 taxpayers, sought a declaration that a state statute requiring the 18 reading of passages from the Bible in school classrooms infringed 19 the Establishment Clause. The Court described the asserted 20 grievance as a "religious difference" (id. at 434), and held that 21 this philosophical dispute would not suffice for standing since 22 plaintiff did not assert a tangible personal interest injured by 23 the challenged conduct. Id. at 435. Some years later, the 24 identical issue of the constitutional validity of required Bible

25 ^{*/} The Court also rejected the plaintiffs' claims of standing as 26 taxpayers, applying the now familiar test first articulated in 27 Flast v. Cohen, supra. 454 U.S. at 478.

1 reading in public schools was raised in Abington School District
2 v. Schempp, 374 U.S. 203 (1963). In reaching the opposite result, 3 the Court stated that:

4 It goes without saying that the laws and 5 practices involved here can be challenged only 6 by persons having standing to complain. . . .
7 The parties here are school children and their 8 parents, who are directly affected by the laws 9 and practices against which they complain.

10 Id. at 224 n.9.^{*/} In Valley Forge, the Supreme Court
11 explained that "[t]he plaintiffs in Schempp had standing, not 12 because their complaint rested on the Establishment Clause -- for 13 as Doremus demonstrated that is insufficient -- but because 14 impressionable school children were subjected to unwelcome 15 religious exercises or were forced to assume special burdens to 16 avoid them." 454 U.S. 487 n.22.

17 The Supreme Court's decision in Valley Forge is fatal to 18 plaintiffs' standing here. Like the plaintiffs there, plaintiffs 19 in this case have identified no personal injury other than the 20 psychological consequences produced by an awareness of conduct 21 with which they disagree. Plaintiffs make no claim here that they 22 have been subject to any regulatory, proscriptive or compulsory 23 exercise of governmental power because of the issuance of the 24 proclamation; nor do they point to any particular burdens they 25 have been forced to assume in order to avoid the consequences of 26 the challenged action.

27 ^{*/} One of the plaintiffs in Doremus had a child attending a 28 school engaged in the Bible reading practice, but the case was rendered moot by the graduation of the child. Abington School District v. Schempp, 374 U.S. at 224 n.9.

1 Like the plaintiffs in Valley Forge, the plaintiffs here have 2 identified no tangible concrete injury resulting from the 3 complained of conduct. At most, plaintiffs have alleged a 4 philosophical disagreement with the challenged actions, and claim 5 injuries from an awareness of conduct with which they disagree.
6 But as the Court said in Valley Forge, "[t]hat is not an injury 7 sufficient to confer standing under Art. III, even though the 8 disagreement is phrased in constitutional terms." 454 U.S. at 9 485-86.

10 B. The "Injuries" Alleged Are Not Likely 11 To Be Redressed By The Relief Sought.

12 Besides the injury-in-fact component, plaintiffs' ability to 13 maintain this suit fails to satisfy the other elements of the 14 standing test. The causation/redressability components of the 15 standing doctrine mandate that the party seeking to invoke the 16 court's remedial powers demonstrate that the alleged injury
17 "fairly can be traced to the challenged action" of the defendant, 18 and is not injury that results from the independent action of some 19 third party not before the court. Simon v. Eastern Ky. Welfare 20 Rights Org., supra, 424 U.S. at 38. Otherwise, the relief ordered 21 would not redress the injury claimed, and the exercise of the 22 power of the federal court "would be gratuitous and thus 23 inconsistent with Article III limitations." Id. at 41-42 (1976).
24 Accord Gladstone, Realtors v. Village of Bellwood, 441 U.S. 91, 25 99 (1979).

26 But the declaratory relief sought in this case would not 27 remedy plaintiffs' alleged injuries. For instance, the 28

1 non-Christian "leader" plaintiffs claim that the Resolution and 2 Proclamation "endorse the Christian Bible" thereby "undermining"
3 their ability to provide religious, spiritual and atheist 4 leadership; and the Christian plaintiffs allege damage "to their 5 efforts to promote and engage in beneficial ecumenical dialogue 6 with members of non-Christian faiths." (Comp. at ¶ 28).

7 However, only "through reliance upon the most speculative 8 inferences is a relationship between defendant's conduct and 9 plaintiff's claimed harm apparent." Mulqueeny v. National 10 Commission on Observance of International Women's Year, 549 F.2d 11 1115 (7th Cir. 1977). It is wholly conjectural whether the 12 exercise of the remedial powers of this Court would result in a 13 populace more accepting of plaintiffs' philosophical beliefs. It 14 is equally plausible that neither the Resolution, the Proclama-
15 tion, the challenged actions of the Committee nor a declaratory 16 judgment denying the constitutional validity of those actions by 17 the representative branches will have any influence on the 18 religious or non-religious views of the American public. Indeed, 19 plaintiffs' inability to influence others may turn on a number of 20 factors that are unrelated to defendant's alleged constitutional 21 action. See Winpingsinger v. Watson, supra; Reuss v. Balles, 584 22 F.2d 461 (D.C. Cir.), cert. denied, 439 U.S. 997 (1978).

23 For example, plaintiff Hutchison, a Presbyterian minister, 24 claims injury because "P.L. 97-280 and the Presidential Proclama-25 tion do not play fair" and "encourage the least rationale, least 26 critical forms of understanding of the Bible, while he has always 27 tried to promote a fair-minded, objective and critical study of 28

1 the Bible; . . ." (Complaint, ¶ 7). This, plaintiff Hutchison
2 charges, makes "more difficult the beneficial interfaith dialogue 3 between people of all faiths who hold divergent texts to be the 4 Word of God." (Ibid.) But, interfaith or intersect communication 5 and harmony is simply too complex a matter to single out any one 6 factor as producing a particular result.

7 To the extent that plaintiffs' concern is that certain 8 unspecified persons will attempt to utilize the executive and 9 legislative actions declaring 1983 as the Year of Bible to further 10 sectarian interests, such injury would not be occasioned by 11 defendant's action, but would be the result of the actions of 12 absent third parties. Thus, what plaintiffs seek is to have this 13 Court declare the challenged executive and legislative actions
14 unconstitutional as a means of preventing feared injurious actions 15 by persons not part of this proceeding.

16 Illustrative of this point are the allegations of Plaintiff 17 Simon G. Cohen, a cantor for various Jewish congregations for the 18 last 26 years, who fears that his belief that "the Old Testament 19 but not the New Testament is the Word of God," will, if publicly 20 expressed, cause "resentment by his Christian neighbors"
21 (Complaint, ¶ 16). Such allegations regarding possible future 22 harm caused by presently unidentifiable persons present a case of 23 third-party causation falling squarely within the reach of Warth 24 v. Seldin, supra. In such cases, a plaintiff challenges a 25 defendant's behavior only as a means of altering the conduct of 26 third parties not before the Court, who would be the actual source 27 of plaintiff's injury. The assumption inherent in plaintiff's 28

1 causation nexus -- that the Court's declaratory relief will 2 prevent third parties from behaving in a certain manner -- is 3 conjectural at best. What the Supreme Court said in Warth is 4 equally applicable to the plaintiffs here.

5 "[Plaintiff relies] on little more than the 6 remote possibility, unsubstantiated by 7 allegations of fact, that [his] situation
8 might have been better had [defendant] acted 9 otherwise, and might improve were the court to 10 afford relief."

11 422 U.S. at 507. As was true in Warth, the plaintiffs' allega-12 tions here are insufficient to assure that they would realize some 13 benefit from judicial intervention. See Mulqueeny v. National 14 Commission on the Observance of Internat'l Women's Year, supra, 15 549 F.2d at 422.

16 C. Article III Standing Requirements
17 Are Not Relaxed For Establishment
18 Clause Cases

19 The standing rule announced in cases like Richardson and 20 Reservists to Stop the War -- the assertion of injury from a right 21 to government conduct that does not violate the Constitution is 22 inadequate for standing -- is not relaxed in cases arising under 23 the Establishment Clause. As the Supreme Court succinctly articu-24 lated in Valley Forge, there are no special exceptions to the 25 standing doctrine in such cases:

26 Implicit in the foregoing is the philoso-27 phy that the business of the federal courts is 28 correcting constitutional errors, and that "cases and controversies" are at best merely convenient vehicles for doing so and at worst nuisances that may be dispensed with when they become obstacles to that transcendent endeavor. This philosophy has no place in our constitutional scheme. It does not become more palatable when the underlying merits concern the Establishment Clause.

1 454 U.S. at 489. And as the Eleventh Circuit has recently
2 observed, after Valley Forge:

3 "neither a mere spiritual stake in the outcome 4 nor an intense commitment to separation of 5 Church and state is a 'permissible substitute 6 for a showing of injury itself.'"

7 American Civil Liberties Union v. Rabun County Chamber of 8 Commerce, 678 F.2d 1379, 1398 (1982).

9 It is true that by denying plaintiffs' request for relief 10 because they lack standing, this Court might not have the 11 opportunity to adjudicate the constitutionality of the Resolution 12 or Proclamation. But this is of no moment. "Standing to sue does 13 not affix itself to a litigant because no other individual is 14 willing or able to vindicate a claim." Mulqueeny, supra, 549 F.2d 15 at 1122 (7th Cir. 1977); accord, Schlesinger v. Reservists, supra, 16 418 U.S. at 227 (1974); United States v. Richardson, supra, 418
17 U.S. at 179 (1974). Moreover, it should not be assumed that a 18 party with constitutionally sufficient injury could not be found.
19 "The law of averages is not a substitute for standing." Valley 20 Forge, supra, 454 U.S. at 489 (1982). Because the standing 21 inquiry focuses not on the putative societal injury or the merits 22 of the case, but on the injury to the particular litigant who 23 seeks to invoke the judicial power of an Article III court, to 24 assume standing in order to find an "available plaintiff" who will 25 "vindicate" certain perceived rights, transforms the requirements 26 of standing into "merely convenient vehicles" for "correcting 27 constitutional error" that "may be dispensed with when they become 28

1 obstacles to that transcendent endeavor." (Id.) This cannot be 2 done no matter how egregious or serious the alleged constitutional 3 violation may appear. The limitations on the role of the federal 4 judiciary cannot be bent even if as a consequence no one has 5 standing to sue.^{*/} United States v. Richardson, supra, 418
6 U.S. at 179.

7 */ That plaintiffs seek a declaration that the actions at issue
8 are incompatible with the Establishment Clause does not save this 9 suit from being dismissed on standing grounds. The Declaratory 10 Judgment Act, 28 U.S.C. § 2201, is not an independent basis of 11 federal court jurisdiction (Skelly Oil Co. v. Phillips Petroleum Co., 339 U.S. 667 (1950)), and could not as a constitutional matter 12 vest the courts with jurisdiction where Article III standing 13 requirements have otherwise not been satisfied. See Public Service Commission of Utah v. Wycoff, 344 U.S. 237 (1952).

14 But even if plaintiffs had standing, whether to entertain a 15 request for declaratory judgment or grant an injunction rests in 16 the discretion of the district court. Abbott Laboratories v.
Gardner, 387 U.S. 136, 149 (1967). Thus, even when the minimum 17 Article III requirements have been satisfied, a court may decline 18 to provide such relief where to do so would be inconsistent with 19 established jurisprudential policy.

20 The Supreme Court has indicated a marked reluctance to have 21 important questions of public law resolved by declaratory judg-22 ments. See e.g., Golden v. Zwickler, 394 U.S. 103, 109 (1969);
23 Public Service Commission of Utah v. Wycoff Co., supra, 344 U.S.
24 at 243. Added to that is the difficult separation of powers 25 question as to whether the federal courts have the power to enjoin
26 acts of the President. Mississippi v. Johnson, 71 U.S. (4 Wall.)
27 475 (1866). These prudential concerns are particularly acute 28 here.

21 "[R]epeated and essentially head on confronta-22 tions between the life-tenured branch and the 23 representative branches of government will not, 24 in the long run, be beneficial to either. The 25 public confidence essential to the former and 26 the vitality critical to the latter may well 27 erode if we do not exercise self restraint in 28 the utilization of our power to negative the actions of the other branches."

26 United States v. Richardson, 418 U.S. at 188 (Powell, J., 27 concurring).

1 II. PLAINTIFFS MAY NOT SECURE DECLARATORY OR 2 INJUNCTIVE RELIEF BASED ON DEFENDANT'S 3 ACTIVITIES AS HONORARY CHAIRMAN OF THE NATIONAL COMMITTEE FOR THE YEAR OF THE BIBLE

4 A. Defendant Reagan's Participation On 5 The National Committee For The Year
6 Of The Bible Does Not Constitute Government Action For Purposes of The First Amendment

7 In seeking a declaration that defendant's membership on the 8 National Committee for the Year of the Bible ("Committee") vio-9 lates the establishment clause and an injunction prohibiting 10 defendant from serving on the Committee or otherwise endorsing its 11 operations, plaintiffs ignore the well-settled principle that the 12 first amendment "applies to and restricts only the Federal 13 government and not private persons." Public Utilities Commission 14 v. Pollak, 343 U.S. 451 (1952). The standards used for 15 determining the existence of state action under the Fourteenth

16 */ [Footnote continued from previous page]

17 The long-standing dictum that federal courts should not 18 confront constitutional issues in advance of its necessity for 19 decisions, e.g., Alabama State Fed. of Labor v. McAdory, 325 U.S.
20 450, 461 (1945), has special force in cases involving the 21 Religious Clauses. Cf. Larson v. Valentine, 456 U.S. 228, 244
22 n.16 (1982). Such cases are of the most difficult and sensitive 23 that come before the courts. The separation between church and 24 state "far from being a 'wall, is a blurred, indistinct and 25 variable barrier depending on all the circumstances of a 26 particular relationship.'" Lemon v. Kurtzman, 403 U.S. 602, 614 27 (1971).

28 Before the Court undertakes the difficult task of resolving the merits of an Establishment Clause challenge, it should insist that the plaintiffs will benefit in some direct and tangible way.
The declaratory and injunctive relief sought would only serve here to resolve an abstract point of constitutional law, and its possible benefit to plaintiffs, even if in the most technical sense sufficient to satisfy Article III requirements, lacks the immediacy or urgency that would warrant this Court's entry into this area fraught with legal uncertainty.

1 Amendment are applicable for the purpose of determining the 2 existence of federal action under the First Amendment. Edwards v.
3 South Carolina, 372 U.S. 229 (1963); see generally Blum v.
4 Yaretsky, ____ U.S. ____, 50 USLW 4859 (1982).

5 The Supreme Court has repeatedly reaffirmed that the govern-6 ment's "approval or acquiescence" of a private action does not 7 convert the private action into an action by the government.

8 Jackson v. Metropolitan Edison, 419 U.S. 345 (1974); Flagg
9 Brothers v. Brooks, 436 U.S. 149 (1978); Blum v. Yaretsky, supra; 10 Rendell-Baker v. Kohn, ____ U.S. ____, 50 USLW 4825 (1982). The 11 latter case is illustrative. In Rendell-Baker, the Supreme Court 12 found no state or federal action when an extensively regulated, 13 publicly subsidized private school discharged employees who had 14 criticized school officials. The school, which specialized in 15 dealing with students who had trouble completing public high 16 schools, received 90 to 99% of its funds from the government and 17 was subject to extensive regulation. Further, the school was 18 contractually obligated to educate all students referred from 19 public high schools, and, in view of its extensive government 20 funding, the school did not charge tuition. 50 USLW at 4826.

21 The question before the Supreme Court was whether the 22 school's discharges of the teachers constituted government action 23 under the Fifth and Fourteenth Amendments, for if the discharges 24 had been government action they would have raised substantial 25 questions under the First Amendment. 50 USLW at 4828. The Court
26 held that the discharges did not constitute government action

1 because the government had not coerced the school to discharge the 2 specific employees:

3 Here the decisions to discharge the peti-4 tioners were not compelled or even influenced by any state regulation.

5 Id. at 4828. Neither the fact that the government provided 6 virtually all of the school's funding nor the fact that a state 7 committee had expressed satisfaction with the teachers' 8 discharges was sufficient to convert the discharges of the 9 teachers into government action, for the government had never 10 required the discharges in the first place, Id. at 4828-29.

11 In the present case plaintiffs' own evidence clearly estab-12 lishes that the Committee, is "an inter-faith, non-profit, non-13 governmental group of outstanding Christian and Jewish leaders 14 formed independently to help focus attention on the year-long 15 observance [of the Year of the Bible]" (See Exhibit C to Plain-16 tiffs' Comp., p.2) (emphasis added). As such, plaintiffs cannot 17 prove the existence of any "federal action" in connection with 18 this non-governmental organization. The Committee is neither 19 government-funded, nor does it act at the direction of the federal 20 government. Indeed, in light of Rendell-Baker, it is impossible 21 to find "federal action" in connection with this Committee.

22 Plaintiffs' sole claim, then, is that President Reagan's mere 23 presence on the Committee as honorary chairman converts the 24 Committee's purely private activities into "federal action" for 25 purposes of the First Amendment. Such a claim is wholly unten-26 able. Based on this novel constitutional theory, every action of 27 the President is "federal action", and the President is powerless

1 to engage in private activity of any kind. While Presidents
2 cannot rigidly separate their private and constitutional persona, 3 they do not surrender the rights enjoyed by other citizens by 4 virtue of their election to high office. Cf. Pickering v. Board 5 of Education, 391 U.S. 563, 568 (1968). Although the President is 6 always the President, not every activity of the President rises to 7 constitutional significance. Thus, a President is free, as other 8 citizens, to follow and espouse the religious faith of his choice, 9 and to belong to political, social and professional organizations, 10 all without turning those activities into "governmental action."
11 See generally Nixon v. Administrator, General Services Adminis-
12 tration, 433 U.S. 425, 465-68 (1977), id. at 533 (Burger, C.J., 13 dissenting). Defendant's honorary chairmanship of the Committee
14 no more constitutes governmental action than would his attendance 15 at a religious service of his choice.

16 Though plaintiffs allege harm in having "the United States of 17 America" support an organization that, in their view, wrongly, 18 endorses the Bible, the weight of "the United States of America" 19 simply does not attend to each individual action performed by 20 defendant Reagan.^{*/} Compare Evans v. Newton, 382 U.S. 296

21
22 ^{*/} If as plaintiffs maintain, the President's membership on the 23 Committee is to be thought of as governmental action, they would 24 still not be entitled to the injunctive relief sought. It is 25 well-established that the President generally is not amenable to 26 civil suit where an injunction is sought that would affect the 27 performance of the discretionary duties of his office.
28 Mississippi v. Johnson, supra; Mabrary v. Madison, 5 U.S. (1 Cranch) 137, 169-71 (1803); Committee to Establish the Gold Standard v. United States, 392 F. Supp. 504, 506 (S.D. N.Y. 1975);
Reese v. Nixon, 347 F. Supp. 314, 316-17 (C.D. Cal. 1972).
Indeed, as the court noted in San Francisco Development Agency v.
Nixon, 329 F. Supp. 672 (N.D. Cal. 1971), there is little, if any,

1 (1966) with Moose Lodge No. 107 v. Irvis, 407 U.S. 163 (1972).
2 For example, plaintiffs could not dispute on first amendment
3 grounds defendant Reagan's choice of religious affiliations.
4 Whether the President chose to declare himself a Protestant or a 5 Catholic clearly would be impervious to constitutional challenge.
6 Just as clearly, this Court can grant plaintiffs no relief that 7 would redress their dispute with defendant Reagan over his 8 decision to affiliate himself with the Committee. The President 9 must, as any other citizen, have the right to form associations 10 freely and to hold and espouse his personal religious beliefs.

11 B. This Court Lacks Personal Jurisdiction
12 Over Defendant Reagan

13 Before a federal Court may adjudicate a controversy, it must 14 possess jurisdiction over both the subject matter of the action 15 and over the persons whose rights are to be affected by its 16 determination. Louisville & Nashville R.R. v. Mottley, 211 U.S.
17 149 (1908). Defendant has previously shown that plaintiffs have 18 failed to present an Article III "case or controversy" and, there-19 fore, the subject matter jurisdiction of this Court is lacking.
20 Moreover, this Court may not, consistent with notions of due 21 process, exercise its adjudicatory authority over defendant Reagan 22 unless defendant is shown to have sufficient "minimum contacts"

24 "authority for the proposition that a United States District Court 25 may compel the head of the Executive Branch of government to take 26 any action whatsoever." Departures from this principle are 27 extremely limited, involving most often instances where there is a 28 clear and mandatory duty on the President to execute legislative instructions, see, e.g., National Treasury Employees Union v.
Nixon, 492 F.2d 587 (1974), or in cases involving the administration of the criminal law, United States v. Nixon, 418 U.S. 683, 705-716 (1974). Neither circumstance applies here.

1 with this forum. Kulko v. Superior Court of Calif., 436 U.S. 84
2 (1978); FTC v. Compagnie De Saint-Gobain-Pont-A-Mousson, 636 F.2d
3 1300 (D.C. Cir. 1980). This is particularly true in this case, 4 in view of the mandatory injunctive relief sought.

5 As plaintiffs have served the amended complaint upon defen-6 dant outside the territorial jurisdiction of this Court, they 7 must demonstrate a basis for extra-territorial service of process.
8 See Rule 4(f), F.R.Civ.Proc. Although satisfaction of the 9 requirements of the state long-arm statute may ordinarily be 10 relied upon in establishing constitutionally sufficient extra-11 territorial process, (Rule 4(d)(7) F.R.Civ.P.), the California
12 Long Arm Statute^{*/} embodies due process "minimum contacts" 13 requirements that prove fatal to any claim of personal 14 jurisdiction over defendant:

15 [U]nless the defendant's forum-related activity
16 reaches such extensive or wide-ranging propor-17 tions as to make the defendant sufficiently 18 "present" in the forum state to support juris-19 diction over it concerning causes of action which are unrelated to that activity, the particular cause of action must arise out of or be connected with the defendant's forum-related activity.

20 Republic International Corp. v. AMCO Engineers, Inc., 516 F.2d 21 161, 167 (9th Cir. 1975) quoting Buckeye Boiler Co. v. Superior 22 Court, 71 Cal. 2d 893, 898-99 (1969).

23 Apart from being a California resident and a California 24 property owner, defendant's forum-related activities are not of 25 such "extensive proportions" as to render defendant sufficiently 26 "present" in the state to support jurisdiction over the activity 27

28 ^{*/} Calif. Code Civ. Proc. § 410.

1 concerning unrelated causes of action. The complaint, challenging
2 both the constitutionality of Legislative and Executive Branch 3 action, and defendants' membership in a non-forum organization, 4 completely fails to allege any cause of action arising out of 5 defendant Reagan's limited forum-related (i.e. property-owning) 6 activities. This Court thus lacks personal jurisdiction over the 7 defendant. See Kulko v. California Superior Court, supra, 436
8 U.S. 84, 91 (1978), reh. denied, 438 U.S. 908 (1978).
