Biography

Biography

Andrew Card initially joined the Reagan White House staff in September 1983. He succeeded Jim Medas as the person with primary responsibility for liaison with the nation's Governors. In March 1987, Card left the White House staff to become a senior consultant for Vice President Bush's nascent presidential campaign. Card returned to the Reagan White House in May 1988, and headed the Intergovernmental Affairs office for three months. He then left a second time, for a position with the Bush campaign organization. It is clear from the dating on much of this material that it was created by Jim Medas and may be transferred to his collection.
